PANIC IS AVERTED.

Nielsen Stops Fire-Frenzied Crowd.

"Star Spangled Banner" Stays Flight of Mob from Auditorium.

When All Quail Prima Donna Springs in Front and Stills Fear by Song.

Detectives Aid Diva by Crying to Foreigners in Their Own Languages.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Singing "The Star Spangled Banner," Alice Nielsen, prima donna of the San Carlo Opera Company, tonight at the Auditorium Theater, checked a fire panic among the thousands who attended the final performance of the grand opera season and prevented what might have proved a repetition of the Iroquois disaster.

Her timely appearance before the curtain and her voice carrying in clear tones the strains of the familiar song stayed the frenzied throng.

While the panic continued and men and women fought to gain the exits, thieves were at work both in the dressing rooms, the boxes and parquet, making away with sealskin wraps, fur pieces and a medal set in diamonds, the gift of Alfonso, King of Spain, to Sig. Constanino.

The majority of the audience, [illegible] of the singer, stopped in their mad rush toward the doors and stairs leading to the street, and many went back to their seats and listened until Miss Nielsen finished her song.

Her efforts to stop the panic which appeared to spread over the big playhouse were aided by the shouts of detectives of the Central detail, who shouted in Italian, Russian, German, French and Spanish that there was no fire in the building and that everything was all right.

DETECTIVES GRAB COWARDS.

The detectives emphasized their shouts by seizing several excited foreigners who in their extreme terror attempted to leap over the railing to the main floor of the building, more than 100 feet below.

Most of the occupants of seats in the gallery and second balcony were Russians and Italians and when they heard themselves addressed in their native tongue and assured by the officers that there was no danger, they settled back in their seats with few exceptions.

More than 500 persons on the main floor and the first balcony and those who occupied boxes fled to the street in fear that they were escaping from a second Iroquois disaster.

NIELSEN ALONE STANDS FIRM.

All of the principals in the cast with the exception of Miss Nielsen, fled from the stage as did also the big chorus. The panic occurred during the singing of the sextette in the third act of the opera "Lucia Di Lammermoor."

Smoke from the grill room in the Auditorium Hotel had been carried up the air shafts and fanned onto the stage. A member of the chorus, detecting the odor, became alarmed and in a shrill voice which carried above the voices of the sextette, shouted "Fire."

GALLERY RE-ECHOES "FIRE."

"Fire, fire, fire," came the echo from some one in the gallery and then there was a moment of suspense. The excitement was tense and for perhaps thirty seconds the audience sat as though transfixed.

Then there was a rumble in the rear of the Auditorium, where men and women nearest exits rose from their seats and rushed toward the doors.

On the stage the sextette had ceased to sing, and Stage Manager Barstow had ordered the steel fire curtain lowered.

SHOWS HER HEROISM.

As the curtain reached the stage, Miss Nielsen burst through a door in the framework and stood on the narrow platform, bowing. Quickly signalling to Signor Conti, director of the orchestra, the prima donna in a clear, calm voice, wholly devoid of nervousness, began the "Star Spangled Banner," the effect was electrifying and the tension was relieved. Before she had sung more than two stanzas of the national song, there was a burst of applause from the boxes which was taken up by those in the orchestra circle, and finally in the balconies.

COMMANDS CRACK REGIMENT.

Prince Charles of Hohenzollern at Head of First Dragoons—Some Remarkable Feats.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Prince Charles of Hohenzollern, who has been visiting the King at Windsor, is in command of that crack Prussian regiment, the First Dragoons of the Guard, of which King Edward is honorary colonel. His Highness belongs to the non-reigning branch of the great Hohenzollern clan, and he shares fully the military tastes of his distant kinsman, the German Emperor.

The First Life Guards were requested at short notice to give a musical ride for his special benefit. After the ride he was entertained and impressed by some remarkable feats of horsemanship.

A trooper of the regiment, in full review order, jumped his horse over a table laid for dinner and decorated with flowers and lighted candles, then got off and made his horse, riderless, jump the table, which had been made broader by the addition of a number of benches.

ANTI-GAMBLING BILL PASSES.

Montana House Enacts Unusually Strict Measure—Chance in Senate Very Favorable.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

HELENA (Mont.) Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] By the decisive vote of 25 to 4, the House today passed Griffin's Anti-Gambling Bill, and the chances in the Senate are said to be equally bright.

The bill is one of the strictest anti-gambling measures ever adopted, and the penalties imposed for its violation are far-reaching.

Not only are players, but those who conduct all known games of chance, as well as the owner of the building, or structure, where they are conducted, are liable to fine and imprisonment in the penitentiary from one to three months, but examplemary damages may be collected by the loser, or any member of his family, but suit at law within a year.

The law is a cobination of the Missouri, Iowa and Ohio statutes. In addition any peace official who permits games to be conducted in his bailiwick, may be removed from office and heavily fined.

ALIMONY DIVORCE REMEDY.

Newly Appointed Judge Thinks He Has Solved Riddle of Putting Stop to Legal Separation.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TOLEDO (O.) Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Judge Kumler, the newly appointed Common Pleas judge, has started a plan by which it is hoped to make divorces much less desirable than they are at present. His plan is to insist upon alimony whenever it is collectable. This morning he disposed of twenty-three cases, granting the decrees in twenty of them.

In more than half of them he allowed alimony in an excessive amount. In two cases in particular are his views set forth. In these cases men were plaintiffs and they made their cases without a doubt and were given the decree. Nevertheless Judge Kumler imposed heavy penalties in each case. In other cases the alimony will run for almost an entire life.

Judge Kumler would not issue a statement at this time, but promised that in the near future he would make one setting forth his ideas as to how the evil may be curtailed.

Save Last Survivers.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—A dispatch from Amsterdam reports that the three survivors who were left on the remnant of the wreck of the steamer Berlin were rescued early this morning.

PAPER COMING, FAST FREIGHT.

The special express freight train loaded with white paper, all for The Times, left Omaha last night and is rushing across the plains. This paper, the whole trainload, was made by eight different mills in the East in an all-day run last Sunday, and was dispatched by a fast train in order to break the famine which has prevailed on this Coast.

Readers of The Times must have observed the use of small type, the omission of features and the cutting of matter in order to reduce the size of the sheet, during the past fortnight. The shortage of white paper has been so acute that there was a risk of a possible break in publication for a day or two. The danger is now believed to be over. Shipments are coming in from various quarters, and unless the railroad congestion becomes worse, the famine will not loom up again.

HARRIMAN TO TALK.

Will Frankly Relate His Operations.

Friends Say He Will Take Public Into His Confidence Tomorrow.

Confession of His Supremacy in Merger Is Feature of His Testimony.

Great Railway Operator Goes Before Commission to Explain His Acts.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] When E. H. Harriman takes the stand on Monday morning as a witness in the investigation being conducted by the Interstate Commerce Commission into the affairs of the Union and Southern Pacific railroads, it is believed in financial circles that startling discoveries will be made.

Harriman will, it is believed, unbend for the first time in his history and fully and frankly expose the innermost details of the transactions which are under investigation. Defiant of public opinion he is acknowledged to have been, but unless men who consider themselves good judges of the situation are greatly mistaken, he is about to take the public into his confidence.

Upon the public's reception of these disclosures, according to general opinion in Wall street, depends the continuance of existing methods. If a wave of popular disapproval should follow, it is believed that what would amount to a revolution in the methods of high finance must be the result.

Harriman is expected to [illegible] to acknowledge his absolute supremacy in the affairs of the railroads which he dominates, even to the extent of spending millions of dollars of their capital as he sees fit.

HEADS OF HIS STORY.

He will testify as to the larger financial doings of the Union Pacific Company and of the group of financiers connected with that company.

A number of other persons who have been associated with Harriman have been summoned also, but it is expected [illegible] the entire Monday will be devoted to Harriman's examination.

The most important subjects on which Harriman will be questioned are the [illegible] ation of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, after control of the stock was acquired by the Harriman group; also the recent stock operations by which the same group secured control of the Illinois Central.

In addition Harriman will be asked to tell of operations connected with the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé.

Several members of the commission are expected to be present at the hearing, but it is not known how many of them will be able to come to New York. The government will be represented by Frank B. Kellogg and C. A. Severance of St. Paul as special attorneys, while Mr. Harriman's and the Union Pacific's interests will be looked out for by R. S. Lovett, John Milburn and Paul D. Cravath.

PLAN THEIR ATTACK.

F. B. Kellogg and C. A. Severance, special counsel to the Interstate Comerce Commission in its investigation of the Harriman system, held a long conference at the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday preparatory to the second hearing of the commission relative to these railroads. This hearing will take place next Monday.

Neither lawyer would impart any information after the conference. It is reported, however, that the commission and its counsel consider that the subject of traffic competition has been adequately probed at the other hearing and that the forthcoming inquiry will deal mostly with the financial operations of Harriman and his associates bearing on the Union Pacific road. Harriman himself will be examined and it became known yesterday that C. W. Hilliard, comptroller of the Chicago & Alton road, has been subpoenaed to testify before the commission. This is taken to mean that the alleged management of the Alton by the Union Pacific will be gone into.

Hilliard is a former officer of the Rock Island road, which, it is said, came under the control of the Alton last fall and he became comptroller of the Alton in succession to William Mahl, present comptroller of the Union Pacific.

Harriman, Otto H. Kuhn, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Comptroller Mahl and Secretary Miller have consulted frequently this week, it is said, with the object of preparing themselves for the examination by the commission.

INVENTS NEW SPARKER.

VIENNA, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Alois Auer, inventor of the Welsbach light, has perfected a combination of cerium and iron which emits sparks at the lightest touch. The discovery is reported to be of great value as an explosive for artillery purposes. The invention has been sold to an American syndicate for $800,000.

NEW TENNIS CHAMPIONS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—The national indoor lawn tennis championship was finished today. T. R. Pell, lawn tennis club, won the men's championship and Miss E. H. Moore won the women's championship, and Miss E. H. Moore, same, the women's singles.

STRINGENT IS NEW TAX LAW.

FRANCE'S WILL MAKE FOREIGN LOANS UNTEMPTING.

Income System Will Produce Much More Money for Federal Government—Enactment Covers Nearly All Sources of Profit — Inquisitorial Power Extensive.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P. M.]

PARIS, Feb. 23.—The new system of taxation, based on incomes from all sources, which the French government has proposed to Parliament, is estimated to produce much more than the old system. Most of the taxes to be suppressed have been in existence in France for a hundred years.

Under the proposed income-tax system taxes will be levied as follows:

Four per cent. on incomes from buildings, $19,250,000; land, $10,000,000. Incomes from securities: French, $14,250,000; foreign, $9,250,000; rentes, $2,800,000; credits, deposits, guarantees for contracts, $600,000; 2½ per cent. on the income from commerce and industry, $25,000,000; agriculture, $4,250,000; 3 per cent. on wages, salaries and pensions, $2,600,000; liberal professions, $1,250,000.

In addition to the taxes on incomes from these special categories there is to be a supplementary graduated tax on incomes of over $1000 commencing with one-fifth of 1 per cent, and increasing to 4 per cent. on incomes of $20,000 and over. This is estimated to produce $24,000,000, while the 5 per cent. of the revenue derived from securities, which is to replace the old stamp and transfer duties, is estimated to produce $26,250,000.

The inquisitorial powers for the discovery of concealed revenue are extensive and will greatly complicate the work of the banks and other credit establishments. The banks must keep records of all transactions in bonds, stocks and bills of exchange for the inspection of treasury agents and must deduct the tax when due from all coupons, stocks dividends, etc., attaching certificates showing that the tax has been paid.

As much money has already been loaned abroad for investment in order to escape the threatened income tax (a considerable amount to the United States,) and as it is feared that much more will follow, the framers of the law have elaborated a double dragging method for bringing such investors into the government. In the first place the holder of foreign securities residing in France, who receives or deposits abroad directly or indirectly, dividends, interest, etc., must within three months after January 1, or each year make a declaration covering the preceding year. Failure to do this, or fraudulent declaration, subjects the offender to a fine equal to half the amount declared and a tax equal to triple the sum of which the treasury has been deprived for each year anterior to the discovery of the fraud.

But realizing the difficulty of securing a correct voluntary return, the bill also adopts methods of preventing clandestine operations.

Moreover, both foreign government and private securities are subjected to slightly heavier burdens than French rentes and French stocks, undoubtedly with the idea of inducing French investors to keep their funds at home.

The only persons exempt from the graduated income tax are Ambassadors and other diplomatic and consular officials, but only where the country which they represent grants similar immunity to French diplomatic and Consular officials.

This new scheme of taxation is for purely Federal purposes and does not affect local, departmental and communal taxes.

NO JOINT ARMY MANEUVERS.

Regulars and National Guards Are Not to Camp Together.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There will be no joint military maneuvers between the regular army and the National Guard of the various States next summer on the big scale that has heretofore characterized these camps of instruction. The militia of the interior States will not participate with the United States troops at all, but that of the Slope Sates will be assigned to practice with the heavy coast artilery. In some quarters the intention to give the citizen soldiers practice in supporting the coast artillery at this time is regarded with significance in the present unsettled and unsatisfactory condition of our foreign relations.

ASSEMBLY IS DISSOLVED.

Action of Colorado House in Adjourning from Thursday to Monday Violates Constitution.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P. M.]

DENVER, Feb. 23.—In political circles here, the opinion prevails that the act of the House of Representatives in adjourning from Thursday to Monday operates to dissolve the General Assembly, as the Constitution limits to three days the period for which either branch of the Legislature may adjourn without the consent of the other, and that it will be necessary for the Governor to call an extra session.

A special session of the House has been called for Saturday, and the Supreme Court will be asked to decide whether the House may legally reconvene twenty-four hours previous to the day to which it adjourned.

YERKES RESIGNS.

SEATTLE, Feb. 23.—S. Gardner Yerkes, general passenger agent of the Great Northern Railway Company, has resigned. He will enter the real estate business in Seattle. Yerkes was with the Northern Pacific for six years prior to 1899. In 1903, he went to St. Paul as general advertising agent for the Great Northern, and was transferred to Seattle in 1905, as the general passenger agent, succeeding B. C. Denniston.

INSURES REPUBLICAN SENATOR.

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 23.—The deadlock in the State Legislature over the election of a United States Senator is to be broken by the Republican State Central Committee, according to information gained here, the plan being to unite the Colt and Wetmore forces and thus to secure the election of a Republican candidate.

IGNORES AGITATOR'S PLEA.

EL PASO, Feb. 23.—United States District Judge Maxey today handed down his decision refusing to grant habeas corpus to Antonio Villareal, the alleged revolutionist. This does not affect the cases against Villareal pending before the Departments of Justice and of Commerce and Labor.

MRS. WALDORF ASTOR OUTSHINES ROYALTY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "The entrance of Mrs. Waldorf-Astor, formerly one of the Langhorne sisters of Virginia, into the ballroom before the King and Queen at last night's court reception, was sensational," said one of the guests to a correspondent today.

"She was a perfect embodiment of the elegante of the Empire period. Lights flashed upon her diamond crown and upon her deep collar and necklace of blazing jewels, which outshone even those on the Queen's neck."

Mrs. Astor's empire dress was composed of net, with embroidered silk of Napoleonic wreaths.

Mrs. Astor carried a fan that was once the property of Empress Josephine. Her silver shoes were powdered with fine diamonds.

As she retreated from the royal presence, Their Majesties turned to follow her with their eyes.

Mrs. Astor was one of the favored few who were commanded to join Their Majesties at supper.

COUNTESS SHUNS IT.

Thaw Trial Disgusts His Sister.

Evelyn's Testimony Declared to Be Too Much for Her to Listen To.

Former Artists' Model Now Ghastly Shadow of Her Witching Self.

Mother of Defendant, Sick of Shocking Details, Wants Trial to Stop.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Countess of Yarmouth has eliminated herself from the Thaw case. For nearly two weeks she has not been seen even in the building where the trial is in progress.

This absence has caused widespread comment because of the statements made by members of the Thaw family upon her arrival from Europe. Then Edward Thaw, her brother, declared that her reason for coming here was that she might be at her mother's right hand in her hour of sorrow.

The great case opened and the Countess of Yarmouth was present while the talesmen were being examined and until the time the jury was selected. Then her attendance became intermittent.

There were days when she was declared to be "indisposed from a cold," but rumors were thick that the testimony of Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw had proved to be of such a character that the Countess had no wish to be further connected with the case.

Then when Justice Fitzgerald one [illegible] the building.

The absence from the courtroom is not surprising in view of the testimony of Thaw's wife, but her absence from the witness room, where her mother has on many days sat with Mrs. Carnegie, awaiting a summons to the witness stand, is capable apparently of no explanation save that the Countess of Yarmouth has withdrawn herself absolutely from the case.

M'INTYRE'S REVIEW.

The former chief Assistant District Attorney, John F. McIntyre, considered one of the ablest jury lawyers in this country, and who, while connected with the District Attorney's office, prosecuted more persons charged with homicide than any other attorney now living, has prepared a review of the Thaw case, so far as it has been presented to the jury thus far.

McIntyre dwells particularly upon the testimony given by Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and shows in detail what in his opinion the jury will think of her statements made under oath, also as to what preparation if any, has been made for the purpose of enabling the young woman to lay her story before the court and jury.

McIntyre says: "To what extent the jury in the Thaw case will receive the testimony of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, is difficult to foretell. They will be the sole judges of its credibility, and it is reasonable to assume that its consideration will be approached upon logical, reasonable and probable lines. Probabilities are always the approaches to the truth.

"The jury may take into consideration the fact that the witness was for a long time upon the stage; that in her art she was taught to act with feeling, portray pathos, modulate her voice, simulate weeping and affect shock and horror in order to attain a climax; that she also was instructed how to robe herself—to make up to resemble a middle aged person, an old person or a youthful person upon the stage. It may be that the jury will believe that she employed some or all of these artifices in the witness box.

OTHER PROBABLE POINTS.

"It seems that Evelyn Nesbit Thaw had other admirers than White about the same time he was paying court to her. It may seem strange that nothing was said to Thaw about them, and it may be regarded as important that there was no outburst by Thaw against others. Why pick out White, with no indignation aroused as to Garland and several others?

"Was Thaw's private life such as would indicate that he himself pursued a simple Christian life; that he had high ideals and cherished and encouraged a high standard of morality; that it was his purpose to lift manhood up, place it upon the pedestal of virtue and thus be a benefactor and defender of womankind?

"If such evidence can be adduced, it might be said by a jury that a disclosure such as has been made would unhinge his mind.

"The witness has begun to take refuge behind a failing memory, which always makes one suspicious of testimony so given. Upon her evidence, in chief, she told everything without faltering; upon cross-examination, when interrogated concerning any important details, she replies 'I don't remember.'

"As has been said by another, 'One of the most dangerous witnesses to deal with is the witness who does not remember.' The lawyer may exhaust his ingenuity, he may try ever artifice of which he is master, if the witness takes refuge behind the convenient phrase, 'I don't remember,' his efforts will be in vain. He will follow the example of Iago, 'Demand nothing, what you know you Know. From this time forth I will never speak a word.'"

BUSY WITH RUMORS.

Counsel for Thaw spent a good part of today denying the usual crop of recess rumors which spring up during every adjournment. The attorneys were particularly anxious to have it understood that they will fight any attemp to have a commission in lunacy appointed.

Despite this, however, the belief grows that Jerome is continually pointing his efforts in that direction. He, perhaps, may have been influenced by this idea in making the cross-examination of Evelyn Thaw unnecessarily cruel. He hoped that the authorities for the defense might profit by this first show of severity and agree to the appointment of a commission. When they failed to do this, Jerome maneuvered in another direction, he himself declaring openly that he had no taste for the ordeal to which he was subjecting the frail young woman, and he wanted to have her testimony stopped long enough to put on the stand Doctors Deemar and Bingaman, physicians to both branches of the prisoner's family.

It is now said that Jerome's idea was to build up from the testimony of these two physicians the groundwork for his application for a lunacy commission. The defense object to this, despite the fact that the doctors were summoned from Pittsburgh in behalf of the defendant.

Some days ago Jerome was given permission to examine the two physicians in his office, the idea being that their testimony might be taken in depositions.

Evidently something occurred during the examination to cause the defense to take a new view of the matter. The District Attorney, in insisting that the doctors be heard, declared that it was necessary for them to take the stand, as the introduction of depositions was not possible without the consent of the other side.

MEANING EXPLAINED.

It is said that Jerome's anxiety to have the doctors testify at the earliest possible moment can have but one meaning, that their evidence must do with the defendant's state of mind as shown through hereditary taints in both branches of the family.

Before Jerome had examined the witnesses in person, he blocked most of their testimony. Now he more than anxious to get it on the records.

It is also reported that Mrs. William Thaw and other members of the Thaw family are anxious that the trial, with all its shocking revelations, shall stop.

Dist.-Atty. Jerome has just begun to show the strength of his hand, it is said, in testing the credibility of young Mrs. Thaw, and will have much evidence to offer concerning her relations with the defendant before their marriage. Everything that happened between them seems to be known to the prosecutor.

When the trial is resumed Monday, Jerome may again try to induce the defendant's attorneys to allow Drs. Deemar and Bingaman to go on the stand. If they follow Thaw's wishes, however, they will oppose this movement. Jerome is not likely to ask for a commission until more medical testimony is taken.

The breaking down of Mrs. Thaw's story will have little effect on the question of sanity or insanity of the defendant, which is the real issue of the case.

If the commission on lunacy is not appointed, the trial may drag along for many weeks longer.

Evelyn Thaw sadly needed the three days grace, brought by the holiday, from Jerome's examination. This was indicated by the appearance of the young woman, who visited her husband in the Tombs yesterday. Mrs. Thaw looks but a shadow of her former self, and those who have seen her almost daily since the trial began say the change is almost ghastly.

Mrs. Thaw's face looks gaunt, hollow and sickly. She seems wearied and all but worn out physically, but she tries to smile bravely.

That she is suffering severely under the ordeal is plainly apparent, and some fears were expressed yesterday, when her appearance was noted, that she might not be able to stand the trying situation still before her.

MANY WHITES, SAYS FAIR OLGA.

NETHERSOLE DISCUSSES EVILS OF RICH LOTHARIOS.

Says There Is an Army of Men Like New York Architect, Who Go About Blighting Evelyn Nesbits. Says "Let Light Be Turned on Moral Lepers."

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENVER (Colo.) Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Olga Nethersole believes there are many Stanford Whites in America. They must be driven from the country, she says.

"It is a horrible affair, this Thaw trial," says Olga, "but I believe in the fullest publicity being given to every step taken. Light is the thing that clears and cleanses. The press is a great educator and the Stanford Whites of this country and England, with their luxurious dens wherein innocence is destroyed, should come under its fiercest rays.

"There is a veritable army of men like Stanford White—men who, drunk with the arrogance of their success, power and position, have constituted themselves kings in a republic, and under the ancient slogan that the king can do no wrong, go about blighting and destroying, regardless of every law of decency and morality.

"Let the light be turned on such moral lepers and public opinion will lash them out of the country.

"The Thaw trial is sickening, but may in the end prove a great good to a vast number of dazed weaklings standing in the shadow of danger.

SEVEN SUFFER SERIOUS HURT.

Pennsylvania Flyer Disaster Is Remarkable.

Passengers Have Miraculous Escape from Death.

Chicago's Postmaster Badly Injured in Wreck.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

JOHNSTOWN (Pa.) Feb. 23.—In one of the most remarkable wrecks that has ever occurred on the Pennsylvania Railroad fifty-four passengers and a railroad crew of ten people were more or less injured this morning, when the Pennsylvania Special, the eighteen-hour train between New York and Chicago, was wrecked while rounding a sharp curve near South Fork, six miles from this city.

Seven passengers sustained serious hurts, necessitating their removal to hospitals. They are:

Frederick A. Busse, postmaster of Chicago; John F. Kline, postmaster of Joliet, Ill.; Felix Isman, real estate broker, Philadelphia; Samuel F. Nixon, Philadelphia, taken to the Altoona Hospital; Thomas Bauer, Lafayette, Ind.; J. Wood Wilson, Marion, Ind., and W. H. Baker, Chicago, taken to Allegheny Hospital.

All will be able to leave the hospitals within a few days, except Kline, who has a serious wound in his lung.

The flyer was fifty minutes late and traveling over fifty miles an hour when it reached the curve. The accident was caused by a brake rigging dropping to the track on the first Pullman coach following the engine and combination smoking car.

The great speed and weight of the train tore up the track and the steel rails for 300 feet. Three Pullman coaches plunged down a sixty-foot embankment onto the thick ice covering the Conemaugh River.

Much disorder followed the accident, which was greatly increased by the attempts of the railroad officials to prevent newspaper men from getting facts.

In the midst of the confusion a number of foreigners were detected plundering the Pullman cars. One was arrested. Considerable jewelry and valuable wearing apparel was taken, however.

General Manager Atterbury of the Pennsylvania Railroad visited the wreck today. He has with him several experts and a thorough investigation will be made.

PASSENGERS LOSE CLOTHES.

Most of the passengers lost their clothing, money and valuables. The attire of some of the passengers was very odd, as they were wearing other person's clothing.

Rev. Dr. Cope of Philadelphia escaped without a scratch, although his car was completely demolished. He attributes this to Providence. He even recovered all his clothing.

George S. Wood of the Colonial Theater, Chicago, one of the passengers, said:

"There was no crying or hysteria by the three women and a girl who were on the train. I managed to get the women fixed up, giving one of them my overcoat. They were in their night clothing and their apparel was strewn in every direction.

"The experience of rolling down that embankment was awful. It appeared to me an age before the car finally struck bottom. It landed with terrific force, breaking the car into splinters."

The telegraph lines were torn down when the train left the track and communication with railroad headquarters was delayed for an hour. As soon as possible Superintendent Long of the Pittsburgh division sent a relief train from Johnstown to the scene of the accident, carrying physicians and supplies.

The Chicago and New York Special eastbound, arrived upon the scene soon after the accident occurred, and the crew and passengers turned out and gave their attention to caring for the injured. Some of the more seriously hurt were brought to this city and taken to the Altoona Hospital. A few were taken to the Memorial Hospital, but the greater number, whose injuries were slight, continued their journey westward on a special train.

When the train left the rails, instead of falling over, the cars slipped down the steep embankment, which was covered with ice and snow, into the river. Fortunately, the water was very shallow. Had it not been for this, it is probable that many of the passengers would have been drowned before assistance could have reached them. As it was, their escape from death was very narrow.

Without clothing and exposed to the elements of one of the coldest nights of the year, the sufferings of the passengers for a time were extreme. The arrival of the train fro the West and the prompt response of the doctors from Johnstown and South Fork saved them from suffering serious consequences from the extreme cold weather.

The railroad officials at both ends of the division made every effort to care for the injured.

There were only four women on the train and only one of them escaped injury.

With the exception of John F. Kline of Joliet, Ill., Frederick A. Busse, postmaster of Chicago and candidate for the Republican nomination for Mayor, is the most seriously injured. Busse is bruised all over the body, and will be unable to travel for several days. Kline has a wounded lung, but has a fair chance of recovery if complications do not set in.

ROAD GIVES VERSION.

FIFTY-FOUR ON TRAIN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PITTSBURGH, Feb. 23.—A statement given out from the train dispatcher's office of the Pennsylvania gives the following account of the accident:

"The train consisted of the Atlantic type engine and four cars. At 11:42 o'clock last night the train was about a mile west of MP tower, six miles from Johnstown, when the accident happened. One of the bolts holding up the brake rigging under the engine snapped, with the result that the brake shoes were let down upon the rails. One of the brake shoes got under one of the main driving wheels and partly derailed the big engine.

"About 300 yards of the track was torn up, after which the engine left the track and dragged with it three cars. These cars slipped down the embankment and landed on their side in the Conemaugh River, submerging them to the depth of about two feet. There were fifty-four passengers on board, and all were more or less injured. The more seriously injured were taken to Altoona and all the passengers have been accounted for.

"With some difficulty and amid considerable confusion, the passengers were taken from the cars in the river by way of the windows.

"The injured and other passengers were placed on board and brought to the Union depot in this city, where clothing and refreshments were supplied.

"Tracks 1 and 2 were soon reopened for through traffic after the passengers of the special had started for Pittsburgh on No. 16."

BAILEY INQUIRY ENDS.

House Committee of Texas Legislature Declines to Hear Further Testimony.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

AUSTIN (Tex.) Feb. 23.—So far as the members of the House committee appointed to investigate the charges against Senator J. W. Bailey is concerned, the investigation is at an end. At a consultation today it was decided that no further testimony should be heard and a subcommittee was appointed to review the 2300 pages of evidence, make findings on the undisputed facts and report to the full committee at the earliest possible moment.

Representative Cocke, the proponent of the charges, in making his statement against the investigation, said that the committee is to make reply to it, and that Senator Bailey or his attorneys have the same right. Representative Cocke urged thta there were still several witnesses to be heard.

According to the House resolution authorizing the investigation the committee shall report their findings to the body, but the guilt or innocence of Senator Bailey is for the public to decide. The Senate committee will meet Monday morning.

Senator Bailey will probably leave soon for Washington, where he is to take the oath of office March 4.

SACRAMENTO.

BERKELEY IN REAL EARNEST.

Fine Reception Tendered Visiting Lgislators.

Less Than One-Half of Solons Inspect "Site."

Spot for Capitol Creates a Vivid Impression.

BY B. FRANK GREAVES.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERKELEY, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] This proposal to move the State capital to Berkeley is no joke—not with Berkeley. The one best bet of the day among the legislators who visited the University town this afternoon was that the people of the State will have an opportunity to express their desires at the next general election. If they do, it is predicted that the pretty bay city, within the next few years not only will be a seat of learning, but the seat of legislation.

By her reception of the lawmakers today, Berkeley showed that she is in deep earnest in the plan, even if it is attributed primarily to a "realty syndicate" that has some lots to sell in the vicinity of the proffered site for the State building.

The reception of the visitors was quite after the fashion of those that Los Angeles gives to her distinguished callers. The Southern California contingent expected momentarily to see Frank Wiggins appear from behind a punch bowl.

Unfortunately for Berkeley's aspirations, the legislators did not turn out in force. Less than one-half the total number of Senators and Assemblymen went on the special train that left Sacramento this morning.

It might be added, in partial explanation that Berkeley paid the fares of all, and that mileage could not be collected from the State at the rate of 10 cents a mile.

Although there were only about fifty lawmakers on the train, there were 200 ladies and Senate attachés.

Seemingly in disapproval of the proposed change, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company sent the special over the road at a snail's pace, and it did not reach Berkeley until nearly 4 o'clock, keeping thousands of the college town residents waiting in the streets for nearly two hours.

Berkeley did not know the difference when it gave the rousing cheer of welcome as the train stopped, but the first group, greeted as "statesmen" was made up of fliers and assistant sergeants-at-arms.

An excellent dinner was served to all the visitors, and shortly after 5 o'clock the party was conveyed in a train of sixty automobiles to the forty-acre tract that is offered free to the State.

The sun was just sinking into the sea as the hills were mounted to the spot that has been selected for the Capitol building, and it is putting it mildly to say that a vivid impression was made.

Straight to the West from the commanding eminence lies the Golden Gate, the ocean beyond, the broad expanse of San Francisco Bay in the foreground, Mount Tamalpais towering in the distance at the right, the growing new city of San Francisco close by at the left.

At the risk of booming [illegible] building lots, it must be said that the site is a magnificent one, with [illegible] that only those who know the [illegible] country can appreciate.

The Berkeley proposal was accepted on the spot by many of the visiting Legislators from every part of the State admitted that the natural beauties of the place hardly could be excelled. The only question is as to the cost that will entail upon the State at large if the change be made.

Senator Lukens of Alameda county said that Berkeley and her neighbors will be willing to give something more than the site. It is said that, at the proper time, a cash offer of tempting size will be made, the bay counties generally joining in raising the fund.

Lukens will push the project in the Senate, assisted by Leavitt, Mattos and other influential legislators from his section. It will be urged with equal vigor in the Assembly.

Southern California is expected to give its approval; San Francisco practically is pledged, and with Alameda, and other scattering support, it is reasonable to believe that the necessary votes will be secured to place the matter before the people.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

SIGNED BY THE GOVERNOR.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SACRAMENTO, Feb. 23.—Gov. Gillett has signed the following bills:

Senate Bill No. 20—Relating to the powers of the Board of State Harbor Commissioners.

Senate Bill No. 37—Appropriating money to erect a monument to the memory of the late State Controller E. P. Colgan in the State burial plot.

Assembly Bill No. 11]—Relating to the senior rights of members of paid police departments.

Assembly Bill No. 167—Appropriating money for the erection of an assembly hall at the Preston School of Industry.

Assembly Bill No. 303—Defining the boundaries of Levee District No. 1 of Sutter county.

Assembly Bill No. 429—Providing money to pay the claim of C. W. R. Koke as guardian of Marshall's monument at Colma.

Assembly Bill No. 528—Providing for the duplication of municipal securities that have been defaced or mutilated.

Assembly Bill No. 565—Providing for the appointment of police judges in municipalities.

Assembly Bill No. 94—Relating to the terms of officers and the collection of taxes, etc., of Levee District No. 6 of Sutter county.

The Governor has vetoed Assembly Bill No. 95, which provides for the organization of a new reclamation district in Sutter county, because the owners of property in an existing district are adverse to being included in the new district and have carried the matter into the courts. The Governor holds that it is poor policy to legislate their rights away.

APPROPRIATION BILL.

NOW UP IN THE ASSEMBLY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SACRAMENTO, Feb. 23. — Both houses of the Legislature held a short session this morning and adjourned at 11 o'clock to go to Berkeley. The Senate finished the second reading of the General Appropriation Bill, while its introduction was the principal feature in the lower house. This bill, carrying $8,100,000, as against $7,300,000 two years ago, was completed by the Committee on Ways and Means and introduced in the Assembly by Chairman Estudillo.

The committee has worked on this important measure ever since the Legislature convened, and has completed the bill in record time. Chairman Estudillo explained that the increase of $800,000 over the amount carried by the General Appropriation Bill of the last Legislature was largely due to statutory appropriations passed at the last session.

One of the largest appropriations is the State contribution of $950,000 for the support of orphans and half-orphans.

The State's portion of the salaries of the Superior judges is $395,500 and the salaries of the Appellate Court Justices $126,000. For the support of the National Guard the bill carries about $500,000. The measure also provides $106,000 for increasing the salaries of all employés in the State hospitals and asylums, while $200,000 is appropriated for the support of the University of California; $6000 for a chair of music in the university, $35,000 for the Southern California experimental and pathological station, $40,000 for the California Polytechnic School in San Luis Obispo, $125,000 for the rectifying and improving of the channels of the Sacramento, San Joaquin and Feather rivers; $442,000 for the contingent expenses of the Senate at the next session and $52,000 for the Assembly.

The salaries of the Justices of the Supreme Court is $102,000. The Governor's secret service fund is $10,000, and for the maintenance of his mansion $6700, an increase of $1700.

The Railroad Commission will cost the State $35,000 for the next two years. The forestry department of the State is given $21,600. The bill carries $420,000 for the support and maintenance of the State prison at San Quentin and $175,000 for Folsom. For the restoration and preservation of fish and game, $66,000; State Dairy Bureau, $10,000; State Agricultural Society, $25,000; State Bureau of Criminal Identification, $3600. It will take an approximate State tax of 56 cents to meet the expenses of the government of the State for the next two years as against 49 1-10 cents for the past two years.

DUNNE WINS CONVENTION.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Feb. 23.—The Democratic city convention today made the following nomination for the leading city offices:

Mayor—Edward F. Dunne.
City Treasurer—J. E. Traeger.
City Clerk—Thomas F. Little.

All the nominations were made by acclamation. Previous to the convention an extended caucus was held, in which the two factions composed of the Dunne people and the followers of National Committeeman Roger Sullivan agreed upon Mayor Dunne as the nominee for Mayor, but could not reach an agreement regarding the minor officers.

The name of Carter H. Harrison, who was a candidate in the primaries for the nomination, was not presented. Previous to the naming of candidates, Harrison's friends announced that he desired to withdraw.

The convention adopted resolutions of sympathy for Fred A. Busse, leading candidate for the Republican nomination for Mayor, who was injured in the wreck last night on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

WAR ON TAGGART.

RESENT LIQUOR PROTECTION.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Democratic leaders in Indiana are bitterly resenting the attitude of Thomas Taggart, national Democratic chairman, who has been leading the fight against reform in the liquor and gambling evils which beset the State.

He has been able to defeat the high license plan, but his opposition to the bill permitting the Sheriff to destroy all confiscated gambling paraphernalia before the owner had been convicted was so obvious that it failed of support.

The law is directed toward his great gambling establishment at French Lick and West Baden, where paraphernalia worth thousands of dollars is constantly guarded to prevent raid and destruction.

His league with the liquor interests has been so open and defiant that he has angered many prominent men in his own party, not alone in Indiana, but in other States which have watched the fight for law and order here.

SEATTLE, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Heirs of the late Mrs. Caroline Kline-Galland, who disposed of $1,500,000 estate by giving it to public institutions, allowing heirs $1 each, have requested a copy of the will, and declare they will contest it on the grounds of "undue influence." Edward and Charles Rosenfeld and Mrs. Carrie Himelhoch, all of this city, are heirs, but say they are satisfied with the will, and are not interested in the fight.

The relatives reside in New Haven, New York, Philadelphia and Albany. The will will not be placed on file in the courts until Bonham Galland, husband, returns from San Francisco where he took the remains of his wife.

BALLOT BOX TAMPERING.

CHARGE MADE BY JUDGE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

Heiner, Democratic candidate for A. [illegible] at the election, before the Senate committee which is investigating the election of Joseph Lyons, Republican, to the seat now held by George F. [illegible]

Heiner claims that a recount of the ballots will give him the election, but that the ballot box has been tampered with. Other Democratic officials of that precinct subscribed to Heiner's statement that the ballot box had signed their names on the seal which afterwards had been broken across the lock of the ballot box and sealed.

Judge [illegible] of the officials was not willing to say whether the names were on the seal, as the rest declared, or whether they were on the inside of the box, as is contended by Lyons's friends.

CAPTAIN IS ACQUITTED. SEAMEN'S STORY DISCREDITED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 22.—Capt. Samuel Varnum of the steam whaler Herman, who has been on trial for several days for extreme cruelty to members of his crew, was tonight virtually acquitted by a jury in the United States Circuit Court.

On each of the first eleven counts which comprised the charge that Capt. Varnum suspended some of his men by their thumbs from the cabin beams in order to extort a fuller confession of a conspiracy to overpower the officers and take possession of the ship, the jury found the master not guilty.

On the last three counts arraigning Capt. Varnum for chaining up his men in the hold and half starving them, the jury disagreed.

SLOPE BRIEFS.

Sustains Bond Issue.

SAN JOSE, Feb. 22.—City School Superintendent Sheriff's today received a communication from the State Board of Examiners stating that the Attorney-General has sustained the legality of the recent issue of bonds in this city to the amount of $400,000 for rebuilding the city schools. It was a question whether bonds issued by the school district instead of by the municipality were legal.

Schooner Is Sighted.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 22.—The power schooner Rita Newman, which sailed from Bandon, Or., January 24, for this port and for which much anxiety has been felt, has been sighted off this harbor in tow of the steamer Coaster.

Search for Missing Man.

SANTA CRUZ, Feb. 23.—The police and the sheriff's deputies of this city, are searching for A. J. Fain, a laundry worker, who disappeared mysteriously two weeks ago. Yesterday his six-months' bride, found in his trunk a discharge which had been issued to him by the authorities of the Napa State Insane Asylum. The couple were thrown together by the earthquake disaster last year at Oakland, and were wedded almost immediately after. Mrs. Fain states that the conduct of her husband was often peculiar and she fears that he may have ended his life.

Favor Capital Change.

SAN JOSE, Feb. 23.—At a largely-attended meeting of the Chamber of Commerce this forenoon a resolution was adopted adverse to the proposed bill providing for county division and another favorable to the movement of Berkeley citizens for the removal of the State Capitol to the latter town. A committee was appointed to go to Sacramento Monday to work in accordance with the resolutions.

Armored Fleet for Coast.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 22.—It is authoritatively, although unofficially, reported in local naval circles that the formation of a strong armored fleet on the Pacific Coast will be inaugurated by the dispatching to this city at an early date of the battleships Indiana and Iowa. These two battleships will form the nucleus of the Pacific battleship squadron, which will be further strengthened by the addition of the new battleship Nebraska, now nearly completed at Seattle, and the battleships Wisconsin and Oregon, which are now being extensively overhauled at the Puget Sound Naval Station. These five battleships may be reenforced during the next few months by two more from the Atlantic.

that the evidence introduced by Mrs. Bassett did not entitle her to a decree, Attorney Stout, for the defense, contended that the charges of cruelty made against Bassett had not been sustained by the evidence.

HE BLOCKS TRAFFIC.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TRAINS STALLED BY SOFT GROUND.

FREIGHT WRECK ON SANTA FE NEAR FULLERTON.

Locomotive Starts to Run Over the Shoo-Fly Line Which Is Built Around the Wrecked Train and Crushes the Temporary Track Into Soft Ground and Tips Over.

Traffic between Los Angeles and San Diego on the Santa Fé is tied up by reason of a freight wreck which occurred at 2 p.m. yesterday between Fullerton and Northam.

The freight train was north bound. Two of the cars leaped the track and turned crosswise on the right of way and two more piled up against and over them.

Soon after the accident the construction of a shoo-fly track around the wreck was begun, and last night it was thought to be in condition for trains to pass the place on the improvised track. A locomotive tried to run over the shoo-fly line and its weight jammed the track down into the soft ground and caused the engine to tip over. The engineer and fireman saved themselves by jumping.

On account of the softness of the ground two of the freight cars of the wreck are half buried in it.

Three trains headed for Los Angeles are stalled south of the place and three destined for San Diego are tied up north of the wreck. There are 150 men working to clear the track, but it is expected that traffic will not be resumed till this afternoon.

RUSSIA FACES GRAVE CRISIS.

Czar's Court Plots to Crush Parliament.

Revolutionary Douma Scares High Officials.

Nobles Organize to Slay Liberal Leaders.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TSARKOE SELO, Feb. 22.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Russia is apparently on the eve of great events. The fact that there is a revolutionary majority in the new Douma has convinced the Czar and his advisers that unless the election laws are altered, the next Douma will be even more revolutionary in its character.

The Czar, therefore, is inclined to acquiesce in Prince Shtcherbatoff's momorandum to dissolve the Douma, suspend the pseudo-constitution and convoke the Zemsky Sober, wherein only Russians will have seats, according to classes, the majority places being reserved for the nobility. The entire court and the upper bureaucrats are supporting the scheme.

The Hertzenstein murder trial in Finland has revealed that the "League of Russian People" has among its members Grand Dukes and great nobles, who have organized for the purpose of assassinating the Liberal leaders. Many members of the league have been elected to the Douma and they are openly boasting that they are going there armed.

Vatican Authorities Consider Suspension of Negotiations Is Break With Government.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ROME, Feb. 23.—Vatican authorities consider that negotiations for leases of the churches have been broken by the French government's failure to resume the conference on the same lines where M. Briand interrupted them, and its having added, "evidently at the intigation of Premier Clemenceau, new conditions offensive to the church, especially the clause prohibiting the appointment of foreign priests as heads of parishes."

When the Pope received Monsignor Gourraug, the Bishop of St. Ann's today, he expressed the deepest regret at the rupture of the negotiations, saying:

"For a moment I hoped that something might be saved, but now my disillusion is more bitter than ever."

The Vatican authorities are highly indignant at the new conditions inserted in the leases and declare that M. Clemenceau has made a secret coalition with Deputy Meunier and Deputy Allard, who, it is said, hope to suppress public worship in France.

WASHINGTON.

POSTAL MEN GET INCREASE.

Senate Committee Reports Bill Out Favorably.

Amendments Carry Three Millions Appropriation.

The "Coupon" Advertisement Clause Is Adopted.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The Senate Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads reported to the Senate the Postoffice Appropriation Bill. The report will not be completed until Monday, but it is estimated that an increase of about $3,000,000 has been made over the amount appropriated by the House bill, which was $209,000,000.

The largest increase is in an amendment advancing the pay of rural carriers to $900. The present pay of such carriers is $720. The House bill increased this to $840. The House made an appropriation to increase salaries of clerks and carriers in postoffices of all grades, and to this the Senate committee added provisions for the graduated promotion of clerks and carriers up to $1200.

Special grades are created above the amount, where emergencies and the character of the service make them necessary. Another amendment was adopted, appropriating $100,000 additional for clerks in third-class postoffices.

A change was also made in the payment to land-grant railroads for the carrying of mails. The House provided that $17.10 should be paid per ton for all mail carried over 48,000 pounds, and the Senate committee reduced the weight to 5000 pounds.

The controversy between newspapers and magazines which carry coupon advertisements was disposed of by the adoption of the following provision:

"That hereafter newspapers and periodicals may carry blank or printed return coupons as part of advertisements, or other blank space for writing concerning the subjects treated, not in excess of one-third of the superficial area occupied by the advertisements or articles without impairing their rights to the second-class postage rates."

ALDRICH URGES CURRENCY BILL.

NELSON WOULD GIVE SECRETARY LARGER POWERS.

Question of Authority to Receive Securities Other Than Government Bonds to Cover National Bank Accounts Causes Discussion—Require Interest on Federal Deposits.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—Senator Aldrich, who has for some days been endeavoring to get final action on his Currency Bill, called the measure up in the Senate shortly before 2 o'clock today. Discussion progressed until 3 o'clock, when the special orders for eulogies interfered and the measure went over until next week, Aldrich stating he should call it up at the earliest opportunity after Monday.

Senator Nelson explained the nature and intended operation of his amendment to the bill. The amendment permits the Secretary of the Treasury to receive as security for the deposits of government funds in national banks government bonds and "at his discretion," State or municipal bonds, also such bonds as the law permits the banks of Massachusetts and New York to accept.

It further provides that the banks shall pay the government at least 2 per cent. interest per annum daily balances on government deposits. Nelson combatted the idea that such a requirement would change the character of the government deposits, saying that if it was held that banks were receiving such deposits as "fiscal agents" of the government the money they thus received should be kept intact by them and not loaned out on interest. He said the better class of the banks did not object to paying interest on government deposits.

As to the first proposition, Nelson repeated what he had said several days ago that the Secretary was now receiving railroad bonds as security. Senator Aldrich had questioned this at the time and Senator Nelson produced a letter today from a banker of St. Paul, which stated that the Secretary had received from him as security for government deposits $150,000 of Northern Pacific 4½ per cent. and $50,000 4 per cent. Union Pacific bonds.

Senator Aldrich admitted that he had been incorrect in denying the statement. Senator Nelson said he did not know by what authority the Secretary had received such securities, unless it should be the words "and otherwise" in the law, saying that government deposits should be "secured by United States bonds and otherwise."

Later, when Senator Aldrich was discussing the bill, the same point was reached, and Senator Nelson asked by what authority the Secretary of the Treasury had received other than government bonds.

"I must confess that I do not know," answered Aldrich. "I do know that he has been receiving a miscellaneous character of securities, but so far as I know he has never reported to Congress the class of securities he has been receiving."

The Nelson amendment, as explained by Aldrich, will require all government funds to be kept in national banks, and thus the large banks of the country, which habitually carry United States bonds as investments, would receive the deposits.

Aldrich said the Finance Committee had realized in dealing with the questions that they were many and difficult, but if an attempt was made to solve them at the present short session, failure in all respects would result.

"Therefore," he continued, "the committee reported a bill permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit customs receipts in national banks in the same manner as he deposited internal revenue receipts.

"As a matter of fact, the Secretary of the Treasury is doing this now by depositing in banks all of the internal revenue receipts and using the customs receipts to pay current expenses. But this operation is not direct."

STORM BREAKS OVER A GRAVE.

MONUMENT HILL BRINGS OUT A HEATED EULOGY.

Gardner of Michigan Objects to Appropriating Money for Improvement of National Cemetery Containing Only Four Union Soldiers' Graves. Andrew Johnson Praised.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—Over Monument Hill, near Greenville, Tenn., the last resting place of Andrew Johnson, a storm or oratory broke today, while the house in committee of the whole was discussing the Sundry Civil Bill.

The place was made a national cemetery a year ago, and there is a paragraph in the budget carrying $32,000 for a superintendent's lodge, roadways, walks and closing walls.

Representative Gardner of Michigan, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, moved that the paragraph be stricken out for the reason that only four Union soldiers are buried there. He said that the appropriation really was "an ingenious way of taking care of the grave of Andrew Johnson."

Brownlow of Tennessee, who represents the district once represented by Andrew Johnson, spoke earnestly against the motion, and told the story of what East Tennessee had done for the Union army.

"The Congressional district of which Greenville is the center," said Brownlow, "sent more men to battle for the Union than any other Congressional district in the country, and they were 100 miles within the Confederate lines."

Passing to a discussion of Andrew Johnson, Brownlow said, amid great applause: "In my opinion Johnson was the greatest patriot of the Civil War."

Gardner's motion was defeated in a vast chorus of "noes."

An amendment offered by Norris of Nebraska, and appropriating $100,000 for the continuation of the investigation of structural matters belonging to the United States, such as stone, clays, cement, etc., under the supervision of the director of the United States Geological Survey, was agreed to. Then $200,000 was appropriated for continuing tests of coal and lignite.

An amendment of Olmstead of Pennsylvania, was adopted substituting the words "United States" for the "National Domain," where used in conjunction with topographical and geological surveys, and $300,000 was appropriated for topographical surveys and $200,000 for geodetical surveys, being an increase of $50,000 in each case.

With these amendments the friends of the Geodetical Survey were content to rest, having added $400,000 to the several branches of the survey.

FIFTY-NINTH CONGRESS

CLOSING SESSION.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—SENATE.—Although the Senate devoted four hours to legislative matters today, nothing was accomplished except speech-making. The Agricultural Appropriation Bill received further criticism. It is proposed that a million dollars be added to the fund at the disposal of the forestry service to make up for revenues away from it and turned into the treasury. While this amendment probably will be accepted, Senator Heyburn would not permit it to receive final action until he has exhausted every legitimate means of opposition.

The Senate leaders express disinclination to permit much more talk on the bill. Senator Hale said today that if necessary, the Senate would let the bill fail and provide for the support of the Agricultural Department by adopting a resolution continuing the appropriations of last session.

Senator Aldrich prevailed on Senator Proctor to lay the agricultural bill aside shortly before 2 o'clock, that he might call up his currency bill. In the hour that remained before the special order for eulogies was reached nothing was accomplished beyond an explanation of his proposed amendment to the measure by Senator Nelson and an explanation of the purposes of the bill by Aldrich. Then came eulogies on the late Senator Alger of Michigan and Representative Hitt of Illinois, Hoar of Massachusetts, and Lester of Georgia.

Senators Burrows, Daniels, Warren, Dolliver, Foraker, Warner, Dick, Spooner and Smith addressed the Senate on the resolution regarding Senator Alger. Each of the speakers justified the record of the late Senator in his administration of the War Department during the Spanish-American War.

HOUSE.—Under a rule recommended from the Committee on Rules by Dalzell of Pennsylvania, the House today amended its substitute for the LaFollette "sixteen hours" railroad employés bill by an affirmative vote of 279, there being no negative votes cast. Both Republicans and Democrats agreed that the amendment made to the bill strengthened it greatly and that it would be satisfactory to the President.

The most important amendment adopted by the House is the elimination of the word "knowingly," wherever it occurs, which has the effect of relieving the railroads of responsibility for overwork unless it is permitted or required with the knowledge of the railroad management that an employé has worked over time.

Another amendment strikes out the provisions in the section regulating employment, which reads:

"Unless immediately prior to said twenty-four hours period such employé had at least eight hours off duty and during said period of twenty-four hours following had at least six consecutive hours off duty."

The measure is also amended as to require "reasonable prudence," not "ordinary prudence."

Dalzell believed the bill very much stronger than the LaFollette bill, for it now covered fast mail and excursion trains which were left out of the LaFollette bill.

The House agreed to the conference report on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Bill, and then resolved itself into committee of the whole for the further consideration of the Sundry Civil Bill, holding a night session in the hope of completing the measure. By a vote of 112 to 53 an amendment was adopted which provided for the continuance of work on a geological map of the United States.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—It was announced that a final conference will be held at the White House next Monday between the President and Secretaries Root and Taft, relative to the contract for the construction of the Panama Canal.

Reports on Block System.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The Interstate Commerce Commission today sent to the Senate the report concerning the investigation made of the working of the block system to prevent railroad accidents. The commission recommends the passage of a bill which it submitted a year ago, that would compel railroads to adopt the system, but now suggests that the time for compliance be extended so the roads may be properly equipped. Whether a law is passed at the present session or not, the commission asks that it be authorized to make an official investigation of all train accidents.

Decided His Own Briefs.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs today received from the Secretary of the Interior a copy of the report of William D. Foulke, a special inspector, who investigated charges against William O. Beall, secretary to the commissioner, having in charge the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. Foulke found Beall guilty of impropriety in accepting employment from the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, attorneys for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, which practice before the commission in resisting claims for the enrollment of various persons as citizens of those nations. Beall was charged with helping to prepare briefs in these cases and then advising the commissioner as to the decisions that should be given and in some cases, deciding them himself. Foulke recommended that Beall be separated in the future from the determination of any such cases. The firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish is the one recently awarded by the government of the $250,000 fee for prosecuting Indian cases.

ROADS FEAR NEW ATTACK.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Wisconsin railroad men, who gladly accepted the two-and-one-half-cent passenger rate, now are haunted by a growing fear that they rejoiced too soon. The conviction is growing that the next move will be a horizontal slashing of freight rates, which constitute the very backbone of railroad prosperity in Wisconsin.

Has the Legislature passed a two-and-half-cent rate and then reduced freight rates as well, the roads could have gone into court and shown that the law would have resulted in loss of dividends. Their acceptance of the two-and-half-cent rate will hamper them in fighting freight rate reductions.

It is interesting to recall that for years the railroads have saved the people of Wisconsin from State taxation. The license fees have met all expenses except the school tax. With the fight now on rates the roads may be able to make such a showing that these taxes will be laid upon the people instead of the corporations.

Brokers Sue Railroads.

KANSAS CITY, Feb. 23.—The Kansas City Board of Trade, today, brought suit in the Circuit Court to enjoin fifteen leading railroads entering Kansas City from practicing alleged discriminations in delivery of cars, which it is alleged, tends to destroy this city as a grain market. A temporary restraining order was issued against the railroads. It was made returnable on Tuesday.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—Wrinkled with age, but with enthusiasm undiminished, Gen. Booth of the Salvation Army left London this morning to board the steamer Minneapolis for New York, whence he will proceed to Canada for the Far East. He will spend two weeks in New York before proceeding to Canada to take the steamer Minnesota, April 1, for Japan. In Ottawa Gen. Booth will be the guest of Gov.-Gen. Earl Gray.

PAINS IN BODY AND LIMBS

JOHN OVEN.

Mr. John Oven, of Chicago, Ill., who was a fireman and is now an engineer, is very grateful to Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey for his restoration to health.

He was laid up with severe pains in body and limbs and had almost given up hope of recovery.

He was cured by Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey after all other medicines failed, and recommends it to all those who suffer as he did.

"I have been a fireman and had pains in my back and limbs so bad I had to give up work, as it is bad business for a man who has excruciating pains. I tried several so-called remedies, but with no improvement, as it is a very stubborn sickness to cure. At last I used Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, which a kind neighbor gave me, and it worked miracles on me. After four bottles I was able to resume work.

"I am very grateful to Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, as I have been promoted from fireman to engineer since my recovery. Had I not been cured this could not have taken place. I would not be without Duffy's as a medicine no matter what it cost. You may publish this testimonial all you wish." JOHN OVEN, 355 Ogden St., Chicago, Ill., May 31, 1906.

Rosy Cheeks

Made by a good food.

A lady living in Acton, Wales, writes:

"It is with both pleasure and gratitude I write to tell you of the splendid results we have derived from Grape-Nuts. For years, almost since childhood, have I suffered from nerve troubles, neuralgia, etc. Some months ago my husband persuaded me to give Grape-Nuts food a trial. The first package I had I felt the benefit of, and since, needless to say, I have never been without it, using it in many of the delightful little receipts given with each package. These wonderful little receipts prevent the monotony felt so often with other foods.

"I sleep better, feeling refreshed in the morning, have gained both flesh and rosy cheeks, lost my neuralgia, and, generally speaking, feel in the best of health. I feed my little girl with it also; she, like myself, suffered from anaemia, and was a constant worry and trouble to me, but now I am delighted to say she is the picture of health.

"I strongly recommend all mothers to use Grape-Nuts, and they cannot fail in getting the happiest results, for it is certainly the most palatable food I have ever tried for children, and they thrive wonderfully on it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Grape-Nuts food is a certain rebuilder, for it contains the elements necessary to renew the nerve and brain tissue. The starch in the grains, from which it is made, is changed, in the manufacture, to a form of sugar, and this renders it easy of digestion to invalids and children, as well as those in the prime of health.

DISASTROUS EXPLOSION IN SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY.

Well-Known Los Angeles Man Receives Shocking Injuries Which Cause Death and His Companion Is Painfully Hurt—Mayor Makes Statement on the Sewer Question.

[SPECIAL WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] John Smith is dead and John Smith is painfully fatally injured as a result of the premature explosion of a blast which had been placed while working for the Salt Lake Tidewater railroad, far out on the desert.

It is supposed that the first discharge had failed and were drilling a second hole, a charge of powder beside them, which exploded, when the first exploded, letting loose thrown over fifty feet, and both were enveloped in flames. The body was burned, even to the bone, but which were charred and in a few hours were unrecognizable.

The bodies were hurried to the County Hospital, where this morning, a few hours after their arrival. He has been working at No. 1027 East Twenty-fourth, Los Angeles.

MAYOR APPEALS.

Mayor E. K. Burton has issued a stirring appeal to the citizens of this place on the sewer question, calling their attention to the fact that they must at once change their method of disposing of the sewage or sewerage.

He says that the city is daily violating the law by dumping the sewage into the river and suits have already been filed. The Mayor calls attention to the fact that after long negotiation he has been able to find a means of disposing of it to advantage to the city, and says that under which this proposition meets defeat through an election the city will be forced to provide other means of carrying sewage, and a bond issue of at least $100,000 will be necessary. In this appeal the Mayor appeals to the citizens to help him.

Detective Auer has completely eluded the officers of the county. He is in the employ of the firm of Newberry & Co., and when a bench warrant is out, charging him to appear for contempt of court in not paying over moneys belonging to Newberry in an order of Judge Oster, the proceedings can be against him. Sheriff McNabb received from a long search, which included a visit to the haunts of the detective in Los Angeles, and other parts of the county. It is acknowledged that there is even a possibility of Auer having left the state. It is anticipated that the matter will be held by the Youngers pending the settlement of the partnership affairs.

BURNING FIRE-BREAK.

A fire break, fifty feet wide is being built around the Big Creek, along the San Bernardino Mountains. Already 25,000 young trees have been set out with the break, have been placed a force of twelve rangers and three guards employed by the Board of Forestry, the work being under the direction of R. Long of Monrovia, an attache of the Board of Forestry. The men are now at the summit of Mt. Harrison. It is expected that the work will not be completed before June. A feature of the fire break is a continuous chain of trails, so that the rangers can hurry to any point of the mountains by the shortest possible route.

ORIENTAL FEZ OWNS TOWN.

Shriners Visit New Building in Force.

Appropriate Exercises Attend Placing of Tablet.

Theater Party and Banquet in the Evening.

The oriental fez was strictly in it yesterday afternoon.

The local Shriners gave a little foretaste of what may be expected next May, when the "burning sands" will have been crossed by Shriners from all over the country, and they will seem as numerous as pebbles on a beach.

The steel pillars have all been erected at the big Shriners' Auditorium at Jefferson and Figueroa streets, the brick walls are ready for the steel arches which will span the 150-foot space, and yesterday a marble tablet was placed in the main entrance to the structure.

At 2 o'clock a procession was formed at Masonic Temple, Fifth and Hill streets, which marched down Fifth to Broadway; north on Broadway to First; east on First to Spring, and south on Spring to Seventh, where cars were taken to the new building.

The column was headed by a squad of twenty policemen in dress uniforms. Then came a brass band, followed by the Bedouin Patrol of Al Malaikah Temple, in their gaudy, silk-embroidered, yellow and blue costumes. The first division ended with a body of 200 Shriners, decorated with the red fez. The second division consisted of a band, the Arab Patrol of Al Malaikah Temple in their Turkey red togs, and another platoon of 200 Shriners. Most of the Shriners were from the local temple, but there were many visitors.

KNOCKS THE KNOCKERS.

Arriving at the unfinished building, where many hundreds of ladies and gentlemen had assembled, exercises were held in the open air amphitheater. The building committee, headed by John W. Edwards, and the officers of Al Malaikah Temple, headed by Potentate M. H. Flint, occupied a platform.

Potentate Flint called the assembly to order and made a brief speech, in which he stated that the new auditorium is the largest west of Kansas City, and that it will seat 8000 people. He also directed attention to the bungalow clubhouse adjoining it on Jefferson street.

"There are many Shriners here who have helped to build this auditorium," said Mr. Flint. "There are some who are not able to do anything, and there are many who are able, who have done nothing—but knock. This building is not for Shriners alone, but for Los Angeles, and it will be the pride of the city when completed. It will not then be necessary for us to lease theaters, or to deprive most of the Shriners and their friends of the enjoyment of a banquet because we cannot get a place large enough to hold them."

After a song by the Shrine Quartette, Mr. Edwards was introduced to tell something about the operations of his committee. The Shriners have a fondness for "Jack," as they call him, and threw chaff at him, but he was not in the least disturbed.

"It was put up to this committee," he said, "to decide between a country club and an auditorium, and we decide that this plan would be best for the members of Al Malaikah Temple. We had to come out here to get ground to fit the size of our pocket book. We started to build the auditorium with $100,000, but we must have more money. We do not ask anybody to give a dollar that we will not be able to pay back, but we will ask every Shriner to help by taking shares according to his ability."

He explained that the auditorium, which is 150x185 feet in dimensions, had been set on the rear of the ground, leaving a strip 285 feet long on Jefferson street and 100 feet deep, which will rapidly increase in value. At present a large bungalow stands on this piece, and will be used as a clubhouse. The auditorium will be spanned by a steel-arch roof, without obstruction of any kind. The large parade floor will be surrounded by elevated seats on three sides, on the main floor, and by a large gallery, also extending around three sides. It is hoped to have the building completed in time for the holding of a ceremonial session on April 28.

Mr. Edwards wound up his speech by saying: "I have given half my time to this work since it began and I propose to stay with it to the end. When it's finished I'm through; I'm through now."

PLACING THE TABLET.

The audience then went to the entrance at the northeast corner, where a marble tablet was temporarily placed in the wall. The tablet was lettered: "Al Malaikah Temple, A.A.O.N.M.S., 1907, M. H. Flint, Potentate."

After a song by the quartette and an invocation by Rev. Baker P. Lee, Mr. Edwards presented Potentate Flint with a small silver trowel, with the request that it be used in placing the tablet. Mr. Edwards held in his own hand a large trowel of mortar, from which the Potentate took a small quantity on the silver trowel and placed it behind the slab, which was held in place by temporary supports.

While this was being done the jolly good fellows were guying the two chief actors.

"A little more mud, Moike;" "Hi, Mott, more mort;" "What's the number of your union card?" "Is that hod carrier a union man?"

These and many like pleasantries filled the air while the crowd pressed forward to read the inscription. The ceremony closed with singing by the quartette.

The day was rounded out by a theater party of most unusual proportions. Both the Orpheum and the Belasco Theater were bought entire for last night. After the performances a "Dutch supper" was served at Levy's, where accommodations could be secured for only 1100 guests, but they were 1100 out for fun as well as supper, and they had both.

FINE LIFT FOR SUFFERERS.

While the Shriners are great spenders for their own enjoyment, it is well known that they are also liberal in other directions. This was again shown by a little act that was not down on the theater bills last night. Potentate Flint went on the stage at the Orpheum and said he thought it would be a nice thing for them to make an offering for the benefit of the explosion sufferers. He went over to the Belasco theater and made the same announcement, and the combined result was a contribution of $365 for the fund. Of this the Belasco crowd put up $237 and the Orpheum crowd $128.

"Hotel del Coronado" greatly improved.

UPLAND.

UPLAND, Feb. 23.—Gordon Day, the "village blacksmith," comes in with a story of a bear. By accident she was imprisoned by being caught under an overturned box, and was held there, a prisoner, for thirty-nine days. When finally liberated, she waddled off, and, after a good feed and drink, she seemed none the worse for the unusual experience. During all that time, she had neither food nor drink.

A petition from the local W.C.T.U. has been granted by the Board of City Trustee for permission to erect a public drinking fountain on the corner of Second avenue and B streets.

He has been making his home in Colton for six years.

SAN JACINTO.

SAN JACINTO, Feb. 23.—The Soboba Indian basket makers have just brought in a consignment of baskets, which they left at the local stores in return for money, dry goods or groceries. The baskets are of firmly-woven tules, and are so compact as to be almost, if not entirely, water-tight. They are made in various symmetrical sizes and shapes, being mostly round. The Indian artists are fast learning the artistic values being placed on their baskets, which a few years ago they only regarded as utensils to store grain and seeds in.

A George Washington evening was enjoyed by eight ladies Friday, at which Mrs. A. G. Munn's patriotic decorations of flags, etc., were a feature. Those present were Mmes. Lawford, G. Matthews, M. Matthews, Bunday, Hards, Munn, Misses Maud Poyas and Clara Meeder.

ELSINORE.

ELSINORE, Feb. 23.—All three of the hotels here have been taxed the past week to accommodate the large number of arrivals. Most of the forty cottages for transients, are also well filled.

A pleasant social was held Wednesday at the parsonage of the Methodist Church.

ARRANGE FOR DISTRIBUTION.

Previously acknowledged by The Times	$4217.30
Received Yesterday	365.75
Total Times fund	$4583.05
Previously reported by all other newspapers	1500.50
Total contributions	$6083.55

Practical steps were taken yesterday by the committee appointed Friday by Mayor Harper to distribute the relief funds subscribed for the victims of the Rawson building explosion on February 13. At a meeting of the committee held at noon presided over by A. B. Cass, Wesley Clark was elected secretary and William D. Stephens was elected treasurer. Robert Yost, Jr., was added to the committee representing the Herald.

Upon the centralization of all the funds it was decided to disburse them according to the needs of the sufferers and those dependent upon them. A system of ledger accounts will be compiled for every beneficiary detailing his or her circumstances, extent of injuries or dependance upon a sufferer, and showing the amounts disbursed in their behalf.

A sub-committee of three consisting of Phillip D. Wilson, Examiner; William E. Wing, Express, and Arthur L. MacKaye, Times, was appointed by Chairman Cass to prepare the data for these ledger accounts. A meeting of the sub-committee was held later in the day and the ledger accounts started.

It was reported to the committee that apparently exorbitant charges were being plied up against some of the patients in hospitals and a committee consisting of Chairman Cass, Secretary Clark and H. L. Clotworthy was elected to try and make some special arrangement with the hospitals for the care of the injured until they can be moved.

It is the opinion of the committee that subscribers intended that such funds as are in the hands of the committee should be used not only for the immediate relief of the victims, but to help them, after they are discharged from the hospitals, or their beds of pain, to be in a position to help themselves. As it is, the generous subscribers must have the satisfaction of knowing that their practical sympathy has done much already to alleviate hardship and suffering, yet there is much which remains to be done, and more funds will be necessary to complete the practical plans for relief.

A report of the individual disbursements from the general fund will be made in The Times after the next meeting of the General Committee. Some of the subscriptions were made especially for certain sufferers, who were named, and these funds will be turned over intact to those for whom the money is intended.

Christ Church, Twelfth and Flower streets, at last Sunday's services devoted the offertory to the victims amounting to $491, divided as follows: Harry Kayea, $15.76; May Anderson, $80; Mrs. Tessie Graves, $20; Frank Zoriki, $45; Annie Clifford, $80; Fred Hodding, $40; Emma Haggerty, $36; Mrs. Fuentes, $45; Annie Hooper, $40, and Olive Crawford, $40. This fund was distributed for the most part yesterday by Mr. Clark.

Following is the list of contributions to The Times fund yesterday:

Arthur Letts, $100; Charles E. Hinde, $100; J. B. Alexander, $25; B. H. Dyer, $5; D. A. S., $1; cash, $1.25; friend, $1; F. C. Latimer, $10; H. E. T., $5; D. A. C., $5; A. W. Davis, $10; A. GIRL BRAVES LIVE WIRE.

To Save Young Brother from Burning to Death.

Twice Hurled to Ground, She Finally Succeeds.

Boy Severely Scorched, but Sister Escapes.

After being hurled to the ground twice Miss Ida Ramley succeeded last evening in rescuing her nine-year-old brother, John, from burning to death on an electric wire in front of their home, No. 981 West Sixth street. Nevertheless the little boy sustained severe burns about the hands and arms.

Dangling from a ring in which several span wires are fastened to a pole, a cable fell to the ground a few feet in front of the little boy. He was playing and at first did not notice that sparks were issuing from the places where the wire came in contact with a piece of metal. When this did catch his eye he ran toward it.

Grasping the wire in both hands, he was suddenly overcome by the spasm of a shock. Scream after scream reached the ears of his sister, Ida. She ran from the house to the child. The little boy was swayed and jerked about with great violence, while he continued to cry in his agony.

It took the young woman but a moment to decide what course of action to take. She knew that if she grasped the child she would sustain a shock, but his piteous cries led the young woman to seize him about the waist. Hardly had her hands touched him when she was hurled to the ground by the violence of the current.

At the third attempt Miss Ida succeeded in pulling her brother from the wire. His hands were burned in a number of places, and his arms had sustained even more serious burns. She carried the child into the house and called for aid. She was not seriously injured, although she suffered much from the shock.

The police were called and made an investigation. It was found that the current from the Pacific Electric West Sixth-street line, conducted down the span wire, caused the injury. Until late last night the police could not secure the assistance of the railway company's electricians to remove the dangerous wire.

In 1906 twenty of New Jersey's twenty-one counties spent $471,574 for improved roads, of which there now are 1154.09 miles in the State.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Trading in many commodities was especially active on the Produce Exchange yesterday, owing to the closing of the banks in honor of Washington's Birthday. Dealers were kept hustling to fill orders.

Receipts of eggs from various sources, together with the releasing of stocks held up in the hope of better prices, have made the receipts exceptionally heavy during the last two days, and owing to the delay in the usual market barbecue of 500 cases. There was no alteration in prices yesterday.

The butter market was steady to firm. On Thursday 63½ cents was bid for fancy valley creamery, but no stocks were offered and nothing was sold. The high bids influenced the situation and the price of fancy valley was advanced 3 cents. Local creamery was selling in nearly all quarters at 65 cents; only a few lots were reported to be selling at concessions under the established figure. Surplus stocks were not heard of; in fact, rapid clean-ups was the general report.

Longhorn cheese is firmer at 20 per lb.

Sales on 'change: One carload of fancy Minnesota Burbank potatoes; 4 sacks of extra fancy creamery butter aggregating 50 cubes.

The onion market is in fair condition. Petaluma reds are temporarily scarce, but show no weaking. Dealers say the condition will right itself in a few days. Lettuce glutted the vegetable market. Prices dropped to 60@1.25 per crate. Oahlocs was also weak under at 70@1.00 per sack. Peas firmed up to 5½@6.

A special Produce Exchange meeting will be held Monday morning after the call session to discuss rules and regulations governing transactions.

The receipts of produce as reported for Thursday's and Friday's exchange were as follows: Eggs, 1171 cases; butter, 28,047 lbs.; cheese, 3803 lbs.; potatoes, 13,514 sacks; onions, 1,892 sacks; beans, 4139 sacks; sweet potatoes, none.

Prices Current.

WEEK-END REVIEW OF THE CITRUS MARKET.

LOS ANGELES, Feb 23.—There is more life in the fruit market, though it is apparent that with the same number of shipments leaving as last year, the same prices can hardly be expected on account of the sizes running so much larger and because of the number of apples now available. Last year at this time, f. o. b. prices were from 10c to 15c higher and shipments during February averaged about eight cars a day less. The trade is waking up somewhat on large sizes, taking good extra choice 80's to 126's at 1.05 to 1.10 cash, while medium-sized extra choice are selling around 1.40 to 1.50 cash, according to keeping qualities and good appearance. Fancy orchard run navels are bringing 1.55 to 1.65, and extra fancy from 10c to 15 more. The latter prices are for standard sizes, which are generally understood to mean not over 10 per cent., 96's to 122's, 20 per cent., 126's and the balance smaller. Decay is being reported on fruit from districts where there has been puff, and also in the more advanced fruit from the best districts. From now on it Stuart's Calcium Wafers are absolutely harmless, but the results—mighty satisfying to you even at the end of a week. They will make you happy because your face will be a welcome sight not only to yourself when you look in the glass, but to everybody else who knows you and talks with you.

STABBED IN HIP.

In a quarrel in a saloon at No. 306 South Spring street yesterday afternoon, Frederick Beckstead of Rosemary station, was stabbed in the hip. The police say that W. Lewis inflicted the wound. Beckstead refused to prosecute and no arrest was made. Beckstead said that he went into the saloon with L. A. Clampitt of No. 1754 West Twenty-second street, and there met Lewis. Beckstead asserts that Lewis and Clampitt became involved in a heated quarrel and that Lewis suddenly plunged a knife into his (Beckstead's) hip. Beckstead insisted that he took no part in the discussion. His wound was dressed at the Receiving Hospital and later he went to his home near Sawtelle.

GRATEFUL MEN AND WOMEN PRAISE PE-RU-NA.

MRS. ELLEN NAGLE

Mrs. Ellen Nagle, 414 4th St., Green Bay, Wis., writes:

"I have often heard Peruna praised and it is more widely known here than other medicines, but I never knew what a splendid medicine it really was until a few weeks ago when I caught a bad cold which settled all over me.

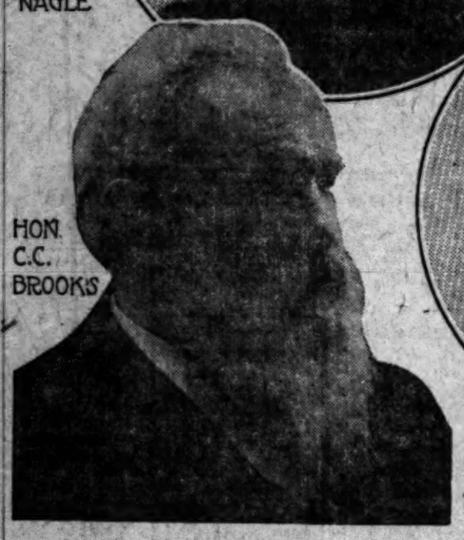
"The doctor wanted to prescribe, but I told him I was going to try Peruna and sent for a bottle and tried it. I felt much better the next morning and within five days I had not a trace of any lameness or cough."

MR. S. S. M. MORRIS

Prince Jonah Kalanianaole, Dewey Hotel, Washington, D. C., Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, writes:

"I can cheerfully recommend your Peruna as a very effective remedy for coughs, colds and catarrhal trouble."

PRINCE JONAH KALANIANAOLE



HON. C. C. BROOKS

MRS. H. A. S. MARSH

Hon. C. C. Brooks, Mayor of Sunbury, Ohio, also Attorney for Farmers' Bank and Sunbury Building and Loan Co., writes:

"I have the utmost confidence in the virtue of Peruna. It is a great medicine. I have used it and I have known many of my friends who have obtained beneficial results from its use. I cannot praise Peruna too highly."

Cystitis Entirely Relieved.

Miss Mattie McArthur, care of Hospital, Medical Lake, Wash., writes:

"I have not written to you for some time, but, oh, I have given you many words of praise. I am so well. I had cystitis very badly and could not walk any distance without suffering intense pain, but I do not have a touch of my old suffering now. I can never praise Peruna enough. I am telling every one how much good Peruna has done for me."

Catarrh of the Head and Throat

Mrs. William H. Hinchliffe, 20 Myrtle street, Beverly, Mass., writes:

"I have taken four bottles of Peruna, and I can say that it has done me a great deal of good for catarrh of the head and throat. I recommend Peruna to all sufferers with catarrh. I do not think I ever felt much better. I am really surprised at the work I can do. I do not think too much praise can be said of Peruna."

Suffered With La Grippe.

Mrs. H. A. S. Marsh, 2128 Reservoir St., Los Angeles, Cal., President Woman's Benevolent Association, writes:

"I suffered with la grippe for seven weeks, and nothing I could do or take helped me until I tried Peruna.

"I felt at once that I had at last secured the right medicine and I kept steadily improving. Within three weeks I was fully restored, and I am glad that I gave that truly great remedy a trial.

"I will never be without it again."

Used Pe-ru-na for Bronchitis.

Mr. Frank Battle, Jr., First street, near Charlotte Ave., West Nashville, Tenn., writes:

"I desire to say for the benefit of others that your Peruna has unquestionably cured me of chronic bronchitis. It is the grandest discovery of the age for throat and lungs."

Peruna is not simply a palliative to relieve some of the distressing symptoms. It brings permanent relief.

Malarial Fever For Several Months

Mrs. Sue M. Morris, 2214 Paterson street, Nashville, Tenn., writes:

"Last fall a severe attack of malarial fever laid me up for some months. My condition was serious for a time and the doctor who was attending me did not seem able to cope with the trouble.

"A neighbor advised me to let the doctor's prescription alone and try Peruna, extolling its virtues to the skies, and I am now ready to do the same, for in three days I was much better and in ten days I was able to be up and in two weeks every trace of malaria had left my system.

"I now use Peruna off and on when in need of a tonic and it braces me up wonderfully."

"The Doctors Gave Me Up".

Mr. Lewis Kitchen, Hulington, Ohio, writes:

"I cannot thank you enough for the good your Peruna has done me. About six months ago I could not leave my bed, and the doctors gave me up saying that I had consumption and could not live. Then a friend recommended Peruna to me, and I commenced using it.

"When I started to use your Peruna I weighed 147 pounds, and now I weigh 172 pounds. I had been sick for ten years, and was so sick I could not turn over in bed when I began the use of Peruna. I think it is the greatest medicine of its time.

"I am now feeling well and hearty and would not be without Peruna."

Weak and Nervous.

Mr. Charles Brown, Rogersville, Tenn., writes:

"I feel it my duty to write you a few words in praise of your Peruna. I have tried many different remedies, but have found that Peruna is the greatest tonic on earth, and a perfect system builder.

"A friend advised me to take Peruna for indigestion, and it cured me in a short time. I was very weak and nervous, could sleep but little at night, but Peruna cured that tired, all-gone feeling, and made me feel like a new man, so I heartily recommend it to all who are weak and run down. Peruna will give new life and energy. I cannot speak too highly of Peruna, and will not forget to recommend it on every hand. I will answer any letter from those desiring to know what Peruna has done for me."

Systemic Catarrh.

Miss Marie Lesser, 928 W. 36th street, Chicago, Ill., writes:

"I am glad to give a good word for Peruna, and I hope that all who see this who are troubled with systemic catarrh as I was for years, will profit by it. I had tried many remedies, but none did more than give me temporary relief and some did not even do that.

"I took Peruna at the suggestion of a friend and was more than pleased and surprised at the results.

"I am now perfectly well and strong."

True Cause of Disease.

True Cause of Disease.

IN these days almost every ailment is supposed to be caused by disease germs.

The medical profession as well as the people, seem to have gone mad over the germ theory of disease.

The universal fear and dread of disease germs is becoming a very serious matter to the welfare and happiness of the people.

Dr. Hartman has consistently contended through all the rise and spread of the germ theory, that most diseases are caused by climatic influences.

For instance, catching cold is responsible for more than one-half of the ills to which human beings are subject.

Danger of Neglected Colds.

A person catches cold easily, thinks nothing about it, neglects it, when it finally becomes settled in some organ of the body, and chronic disease is the result.

A few doses of Peruna in the beginning of the cold would have saved months of suffering, as well as great expense for treatment.

Peruna is a reliable relief for cold. Almost everybody knows this.

Instead of trying to dislodge or kill some imaginary germ, if Peruna was used at the proper time its tonic properties and anti-catarrhal qualities would soon convince the patient that he has found the right remedy.

A multitude of letters are received testifying to this fact.

Keep Peruna in the house. Use it whenever cold or climatic affections assail, and sickness in the household will become greatly lessened, if not entirely prevented.

Catarrh of the Stomach.

Mr. Christian Hofmann, R. F. D. 1, Slatington, Pa., writes:

"For many years I suffered with catarrh of the stomach. I was coughing day and night. After having tried three doctors and many remedies, one of your almanacs came to my hand, and I bought some Peruna. So far I have taken six bottles, and I have not suffered with catarrh this summer. I am cured and Peruna did it. I give Peruna to my children when they feel bad and you should see how healthy they are."

Nose, Throat and Stomach.

Mr. Delbert B. Craft, Lowell, Ind., writes:

"For a long time I suffered with chronic catarrh of the nose, throat and stomach. I would continually take cold and my stomach was in bad condition. I truly suffered untold misery. I took various medicines and tried the treatment of several physicians, but I felt no better. A friend advised me to take Peruna. I wrote to Dr. Hartman, who prescribed treatment. As soon as I commenced to take Peruna I was surprised at the relief it gave me. I kept on taking it until I had taken thirteen bottles and was cured."

Mrs. Joseph Vittur, 5709 Erie street, Austin Sta., Chicago, Ill., writes:

"Your medicine Peruna was a great benefit to me. I suffered with catarrh of the nose and head for many years. Three bottles of Peruna cured me, after I had considered it impossible to ever be cured again. I now always keep Peruna in the house, and recommend it to every one suffering from catarrh as a good remedy.

RESCUE THREE WOMEN.

Last Survivors of Wrecked Steamer Berlin Are Saved—Endured Terrible Suffering.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

HOOK OF HOLLAND, Feb. 23.—In the early hours of the morning three remaining survivors were taken off the wreck of the British steamer Berlin by the same lifeboat crew which has done such splendid work during the past sixty hours.

All three are women—Frau Weintberger, her 16-year-old nurse girl, Mina Ripler, and Fraulein Theile. This makes the number of saved fifteen out of the 141 who were on board.

Twenty-two bodies were recovered this morning from below the deck of the Berlin and these are believed to constitute all the dead in the hulk.

Capt. Spering, who led the rescue party which went out to the Berlin and rescued the last three survivors, says that when they climbed on board they found the three women huddled under the hurricane deck, surrounded by a dozen corpses.

"The women were in a pitiable plight, screaming and crying hysterically as they clung to us," said the captain. "They were famished and stiff with cold; their clothing was soaked with icy water and they were unable to walk.

"The nurse, Fraulein Ripler, insisted that her companions should be saved first, so I carried Fraulein Theile to the side, assisted her into a rope cradle and lowered her upon the raft. Frau Weintberger was next taken off. She was in a pitiful state of distress, weeping for her husband and child, who were drowned. Finally Fraulein Ripler was placed upon the raft, which was hauled alongside the Wodan."

CROCKER LOSES SUIT.

PARIS, Feb. 23.—George Crocker of San Francisco has been non-suited and condemned to pay the costs of his action to recover $20,000 from Dr. Doyen which Crocker paid the physician in 1904 for treating the late Mrs. Crocker for cancer. The first tribunal of the Seine, in rendering judgment today, held that the good faith of Dr. Doyen had been wrongly attacked. The contract, it was pointed out, had been freely entered into by the parties concerned and could not therefore be annulled unless Dr. Doyen had failed to perform his duty, which was not the case, for he withdrew at Crocker's request and was ready at all times to resume his treatment of Mrs. Crocker. The court declared it could not decide the question of reasonableness of the fee, but only that of the validity of the bill.

WRETCH TELLS MURDER PLAN.

Adams Reveals Plot to Kill Gov. Steunenberg.

Implicates Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone.

Assassin's Testimony Is Direct Against Them.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WALLACE (Idaho) Feb. 23.—The story of the plot to assassinate Ex-Gov. Steunenberg was told to the world today when Steve Adams's confession was read to the jury which is trying him for the murder of Fred Tyler.

Adams's confession states that he joined the Western Federation of Miners at Cripple Creek; that he knew Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone; that Pettibone told him to go to Idaho and see Simpkins—that they wanted to "get" Steunenberg; that Pettibone went to Haywood and got $200 for his expenses; that the manner of "getting" Steunenberg was left to him; that he went to Idaho, met Simpkins and there planned the crime.

Following is the substance of the confession of Steve W. Adams, alleged to have been made Tuesday, November 27, 1906, at the office of the warden of the Boise penitentiary in the presence of Pinkerton detective James McPartland and his stenographer, George Hubner. The confession, which was witnessed by Warden Whitney, was read by McPartland this morning:

"State your name."

"Steven W. Adams. I was born in Jackson county, Missouri, in 1867."

"How many of the family were there of you?"

"Three boys, a mother and a father."

"What were their names?"

"One was Joseph Smick and the other William Thomas."

"Where does Joseph reside?"

"I received a letter from him a short time ago from Creed, Colo."

"Where did you ever work in a mine?"

"At Cripple Creek, near Telluride and above Silver."

"When did you first go to Telluride?"

"In March, 1899, or 1900."

IS RECOGNIZED TOTEMITE.

"Are you a member of the Western Federation of Miners?"

"Yes sir, and have the card of 1906."

"When did you join?"

"It was when Dan McGinley was secretary."

"How long had you resided in Oregon?"

"To the best of my knowledge, since 1904."

"Where did you come from when you went to Oregon?"

"Park City, Utah."

"State if at that time you had got acquainted with Charles H. Moyer, William Haywood and George Pettibone."

"I had."

"When did you become acquainted with them?"

"Before the Arthur Collins assassination."

"You were intimately acquainted with them right along after that up to the time you left there?"

"Yes, sir; I have not seen them since."

"During the time you were acquainted, did you ever hold any conversation with them about the assassination of ex-Gov. Steunenberg?"

"They told me to go to Idaho and see Jack Simpkins; that he wanted to see me about some business connected with Steunenberg, and that I would find him at Wallace, I believe."

"I want you to be as particular as possible. When did you talk about the assassination of Steunenberg?"

"Shortly after I saw Simpkins. It was shortly after the dynamiting of the depot at Independence in July, 1904, I think it was."

GETS PRICE OF BLOOD.

"Who talked with you about the assassination of ex-Gov. Steunenberg?"

"George Pettibone. He told me that Simpkins wanted to see me and when I went to see Simpkins he told me about Steunenberg. He said they wanted to 'get Steunenberg.'"

"They said they wanted to 'get' him, did they say kill?"

"They said 'get' him."

"You mean Simpkins said they wanted to 'get' him? Moyer was not present, was he?"

"I don't know where he was, but I think he was in jail at Telluride and I got $200 to come to Wallace with, from George Pettibone. Pettibone went to Haywood to get it."

"How did you know that he did?"

"He told me that he did. He asked me to wait until he went and got it. He said nothing as to the manner in which we were to remove Steunenberg. He gave us no directions. It was understood that I was to use my own judgment and Pettibone told me about Simpkins wanting to see me before I received money. I did not see Haywood after I received the money. Simpkins told me that he wanted me to go up on the timber claim in the morning. Simpkins said that he would write back that day for the money and then we would go down on the Steunenberg case. He wrote to Denver, but I don't know if he got the money or not. Pettibone told me afterward that the money was sent to the wrong address. After I got to the timber claim I met some settlers. One named Mason and another named Rale. He is the one known as 'Wall Eye.' I also met a man by the name of Glover. There were some claim jumpers in there. Simpkins told me that he wanted to get rid of these fellows and that if I did so he would give me $300.

KILLS TWO MEN.

"Two men got killed. Meut Glover, Simpkins and myself assisted in the killing. Tyler was the first man killed and I killed him with a 25-35 Winchester. We went down to Tyler's cabin and he was not there. We stayed around all day and then went out on the trail. We stopped at a spring and I heard some one coming. I said 'All right, I am glad of it.'

"We hid behind some trees and I saw that it was Tyler coming. He had a big gun buckled on and I told him to hold up his hands. One of the boys took his gun and we took him to Simpkins's cabin and kept him until morning and then took him three miles out on the trail and I killed him. Three of us were together all the time. After the killing the body was left between two logs. Tyler always refused to say where he came from, but said that a man by the name of Lewis, a Spokane man, had placed him on the claim.

"After the killing I went down to Harrison and met Simpkins. I told him what I had done and said that he did not have any more claim jumpers on his claim. He said that we would rest around Harrison for awhile and then go back and get the rest of the fellows on the other claims.

SLAYS IN COLD BLOOD.

"In about a week or thereabouts we went back up there and I met a fellow by the name of Boule and another man coming down the trail. We fired and killed Boule. There was Jack Simpkins, Meut Glover and myself. There was another man whose name I don't remember. We met the man on the trail, and Simpkins and Glover knew him. Mason was not there. We shot at the man with Boule, but missed him. After that we went back to Glover's cabin, and Simpkins went to Mason's cabin. We finally got out by going to Glover's cabin, and got a canoe and went by the way of St. Joseph River. The canoe was lying on the bank and we took it.

"We landed above the Glover ranch and let the canoe go adrift. We waited around there until the Sheriff came up to investigate the matter of the death of Boule. Then we went back to the place and blew up the cabins. I don't remember how many, or whether it was all of them or not. There were two or three, at least. The Sheriff did not find both bodies, only the body of Boule, which was close to Simpkins's cabin. I don't think that the Sheriff asked Simpkins about the body. I did not get the $300 promised, as Simpkins said that the settlers promised to pay, but that they were slow in coming through. Mason gave me $100 and Simpkins $20 when I left there. I suppose Simpkins is there yet. He is a married man with a large family.

"I will say this thing about these people. There was a rich man in Spokane by the name of E. R. Lewis, who was sending men up there to jump claims and trying to get them away from the settlers. They said that Lewis had furnished the money to come up and hold the claims until they could take them away from the settlers. They were to get half for doing so, and Lewis the other half. The claims were lumber claims and had good timber on them.

"After the affair was over I left Simpkins and went back up to Denver. There had been no money sent to tend to the Steunenberg matter and I let that go."

This is where the confession ended at the adjournment of court at noon to meet again at 2 p.m.

GETS LODGING NEAR ROYALTY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, Feb. 23.—Mrs. Potter Palmer left for Paris on Thursday on her way to Biarritz. She is getting credit for a great coup in having secured the only other suite on the same floor as King Edward in the Hotel at Biarritz. Mrs. Palmer reserved the rooms three months ago for dates which, as it proved by chance, coincided with the King's visit. Many applicants for rooms have besieged the hotel proprietors, some of them offering eight times the sum which Mrs. Palmer agreed to pay for the suite, but naturally she holds them to their contract.

HARRY BAKER IS DAZZLING EAST.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Harry Baker, the California featherweight, made it plain to the big crowd at the National Athletic Club tonight why he was able to defeat Frankie Neil and stay twenty rounds with Abe Attell in their first meeting, by boxing Tommy O'Toole of this city in a six-round bout.

It was Baker's début in the eastern ring, and he more than made good. O'Toole is considered the best six-round performer of his weight in the country, but there was scarcely a moment in tonight's fight when Baker failed to display a marked superiority. Baker's footwork and speed dazzled the boy from Fort Richmond. He was in and out like a flash, and carried dismay to his opponent with an untiring left. He beat Tommy to a punch and landed five blows to his opponent's one.

O'Toole fought a plucky battle, and rushed his shadowy rival about the ring, but he found it difficult to hit his mark. More than one-half of O'Toole's leads were missed.

The Athens county (O.) grand jury yesterday returned five indictments against former employés of the State Insane Asylum for alleged cruelties practiced against inmates of the institution. Three of the men were indicted for second-degree murder in "tramping out" an inmate.

POOR SHOW FOR THE DYSPEPTIC.

Poisoned Stomach, Clogged Brain, Wavering Ambition, Failure—Unless He Seizes His Opportunity.

There's no good reason for any man's remaining a dyspeptic—a burden to himself and family, when he should be a producer.

There's only one reason why he has been a dyspeptic, and that is because he has overworked his stomach so that it cannot secrete the juices and work the muscles necessary to digest the food.

Failure Staring Him in the Face.

What the dyspeptic must do is to help the stomach out. It is full of a poisonous pile of fermenting, nauseating food. Instead of being assimilated and carried by the blood to make nerve and muscle and rebuild the waste tissues, it lies there inactive.

First, take an unirritating cathartic and get rid of this food.

Second, get a 50-cent package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets from any druggist and take one at each meal and at bed time. The tablet will do the digesting while the stomach is regaining its forces. Before the box is gone, your stomach will be vastly relieved if not cured. Why? Because Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain the very elements which your stomach possessed when it was healthy—pepsin, diastase, golden seal and others. It was because your stomach kept losing its supply of these digestive ferments that you became dyspeptic.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do the work simply, surely and without injury. They are not a medicine, but the working out of a scientific principle upon the food you eat.

Hundreds of sufferers in far worse condition than you have been positively cured of dyspepsia by these wonderful little tablets. Forty thousand physicians in the United States and Canada recommend them.

If you are uncertain and wish further proof, send us your name and address today for a free trial package, which we will gladly mail you at once. F. A. Stuart Co., 74 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

GERMANY STORM-SWEPT.

BERLIN, Feb. 23.—Reports of severe storms, snow, rain and high waters on the rivers are received from various points, and there has been a heavy fall of snow for several days past in South Germany. In some parts of the Black Forest the snow is six feet deep, and there has been a heavy fall of snow on the Rhone and Thuringian Mountains. Several cases have been reported of people losing their way in the snow and being frozen to death. The Rhine is rising rapidly and today it gained five feet at Cologne.

FALSE ALARM FOR BIG FIRE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, Feb. 23.—The Mail publishes a Rome dispatch which reports Prof. Matteucci of the Vesuvius Observatory as declaring that toward the end of March the substance of the new comet, discovered by Marchette, will come in contact with the earth's atmosphere with consequences probably dangerous to the world. The professor is of the opinion that the danger will be brief, but it may be acute.

The doctor examined me, and he said it was too dangerous a place to tackle in the warm season of the year. He would wait until the last of October, and he would send to Baltimore after the doctors to come down and assist him about cutting the tumor out. It was about 5 inches long, on a very dangerous artery. Returning from Cambridge I stopped at a store and bought a bottle of Warner's Safe Cure and commenced taking it according to directions, and before I had used that bottle the tumor was nearly gone, and I got another bottle and took half of that, and I was finally cured when the last of August came without being operated on. If you wish to use my name you are perfectly welcome to do so. I am known in Cambridge and in Dorchester and several other counties. I reside near Robin Creek.—Lillian F. Coulbourn, East Market, R. VETERAN'S DEATH.

Capt. Kleinfield of Hynes Laid to Rest on Washington's Birthday While Friends Mourn.

Capt. Joseph P. Kleinfield of Hynes died at his home on February 20 and was buried in the Masonic Cemetery at Downey on Friday.

The deceased was born in Utica, N. Y., September 15, 1839. He fought through the Civil War and served in the regular army at the close of that struggle, giving in all six years to the service of his country. He was a high Mason, being a member of the Shrine, and in former years was active in Masonic circles. He resided in California for a number of years, and removed from San Diego to Hynes in 1905, where he engaged in the mercantile business. He was a sufferer for several years from kidney trouble, but only severely during the past few months. He leaves a widow and four small children.

All arrangements had been made to give him burial with Masonic rites, but the rain caused plans to be changed, and he was quietly laid away, after services in the Presbyterian Church, which was filled with his friends, who presented splendid floral tributes to his memory.

IMPRESSED BY THE CHINESE.

"I never heard such an impassioned appeal for citizenship as that," remarked A. G. Gall, a Washington (D. C.) newspaper man, who is visiting Los Angeles in company with his wife. He referred to the speech, just made at a gathering in the rooms of the Methodist Mission in Chinatown in celebration of the Chinese New Year. In accordance with custom, an entertainment was given at the mission, where were assembled a large company of invited guests of the teachers and pupils. There were representatives from many cities, a large number of the guests being tourists who had never before attended such a celebration. Among them was Mr. Gall and his wife. "We were strolling through Chinatown sightseeing," said Gall, "and met a bright-looking, intelligent Chinaman, who pointed out to us some of the places of interest. My wife expressed a wish to see some Chinese children, and he directed us to the mission, so we went up. I'd no idea of such places here. We went into the mission with the idea of staying a few minutes, but I never was more interested in my life, and we spent the entire evening. In the course of the entertainment, which consisted of songs, Bible readings, recitations, etc., by the Chinese young men and children, one of them, an exceedingly intelligent Chinese, with all the dignity of his race made in five minutes the most impassioned appeal for citizenship I ever listened to. I have heard the demagogues in Washington talk about this Chinese business, but I had never before heard the other side presented with such force and appealing strength. Hereafter my pen will move in sympathy with the Chinese."

The Committee on Education of the constitutional Oklahoma convention yesterday submitted a report, requiring compulsory and separate schools for whites and negroes.

Notification of the existence of a state of war in Central America has reached the State Department in a cablegram from American Minister Combes, dated Guatemala City yesterday.

TALK LITTLE; BOTH SO SURE.

PASADENA CITY CAMPAIGN IN CLOSE BALANCE.

Candidate Earley Has the Support of Large Proportion of Merchants and Professional Men and Waterhouse Is Strongly Backed for His Stand on Municipal Lighting Plant.

Office of The Times, No. 36 S. Raymond Ave.

PASADENA, Feb. 24.—Although election time is rapidly approaching, the cohorts of the opposing candidates are doing but little talking and almost no active campaigning has as yet been undertaken. There is a feeling of confidence in both camps although about every one realizes that the victorious side will have no walk-over. Both men have a large circle of admirers and, although there are differences of opinion as to the relative merits of the men, there is no one who charges either candidate with a lack of sincerity or integrity.

Mayor Waterhouse has won many strong supporters by the stand which he has taken with regard to the municipal lighting plant. In the outlying districts where for years there have been no lights he is particularly popular and the residents of these sections will undoubtedly cast their votes for him. On the other hand there are those who feel that he forced the lighting plant project a little and that he allowed the more urgent matter of a water system to slide.

Mr. Earley has the support of a large proportion of the merchants and professional men, especially those who are anxious to have the city own its own water. He has pledged himself to support the water proposition and it is generally felt that he will be all in his power to see that the much-discussed question is settled one way or the other.

Both of the candidates have insisted that there shall be no throwing of mud and no belittling of the opposition will be tolerated in either camp. But little talking is being done by the leaders of the opposing cohorts and where the fight will wax the hottest is not known.

There have been plenty of prophecies as to the outcome of the election, but no betting men have cared to place much money and it is generally conceded to be a pretty even proposition, although Earley will undoubtedly have the support of the substantial business men of the community.

VALUABLE DOG WOUNDED.

Walstein Root's valuable bulldog came staggering home yesterday afternoon with a gaping bullet wound in its left breast and bleeding profusely from other injuries. Some person had evidently fired a shot at close range as the projectile had entered the breast, ranged backward and, missing the spinal column and found exit at the hip joint, shattering several bones on its way. Dr. Medici de Biron was hurriedly summoned and later stated that he hoped to save the dog's life although he admitted that the case was desperate.

Mr. Root has been unable to secure any trace of the person who fired the shot though he is investigating closely and will make things hot for the guilty one if he can be detected. The dog was of a gentle disposition and any idea that he had attacked a person and was shot for that reason is out of the question. Coming on the dog in the lumbering gaes it looks as if some brute had a grudge against dogs in general, and was determined to exterminate as many as possible. The injured dog was to have been entered in the coming bench show at Los Angeles.

TO CONTINUE CONCERTS.

The efforts to interest the general public in the Sunday afternoon concerts has been so successful that a sufficient sum has been raised to enable the renewal of them. For the past two weeks there have been no concerts owing to the fact that the money subscribed by the merchants had become exhausted. A call for private subscriptions was made, however, and already enough pledges have been secured to insure the continuation of the concerts for some time.

It is probable that an effort will be made to place the concerts on such a basis as to make it unnecessary to continually canvass the city for money. There is a movement to secure a small endowment which will relieve the management from further worry. This afternoon there will be a concert in Central Park at the usual hour.

GOOD BALL PROMISED.

Good baseball is promised for tomorrow afternoon when the Pasadena team meets the Hoegee Flats of Los Angeles on the home field. Both teams are in the best of condition and nine innings of lively play are promised. The local players are determined to wipe out the memory of some of their past defeats and they will make the visitors hustle.

The management of the Pasadena team has inaugurated a new custom with regard to admission fees and henceforth every seat in the grandstand will be charged for. It has been the custom to charge for men only, women being admitted free. This is no longer possible, however, as considerable money is required in order to keep the team up to its present standard.

PRESBYTERIANS' EDIFICE.

The new building of the First Presbyterian Church on East Colorado street is rapidly nearing completion, and will soon be ready for occupancy. The work has been slow, as the artificial stones, which are used in the construction, had to be cast upon the grounds. Every part of the work is thorough, however, and the edifice will be one of the finest in Southern California.

In architecture the structure is Gothic. Everything about the building is massive and gives the impression of great strength. The finishing work has been seen to with the greatest of care, and no money has been spared to make everything as complete as possible. Ample room will be provided for all of the departments of church work.

CRAIG GETS READY.

Makes Arrangements for Starting the Shipbuilding Plant on Long Beach Site.

LONG BEACH, Feb. 23.—A definite settlement of the Craig shipbuilding proposition is to be secured early the coming week. George F. Craig, head of the firm, arrived yesterday from the East and was in consultation today with the executive committee of the Los Angeles Dock and Terminal Company, for which Long Beach citizens a month ago raised $160,000 in payment for a site on the inland harbor. Considerable progress in reaching an agreement on many of the points in controversy were made, and the Dock and Terminal people and Mr. Craig are sanguine of a satisfactory contract being signed next week.

Mr. Craig, before leaving Ohio, practically completed his purchase of machinery for the shipbuilding plant, and has all heads of departments and a majority of his skilled men under contract ready to come to the Coast as soon as they are needed.

The Margarita is built for shallow water, drawing but eighteen inches. She is forty feet long, ten-foot beam and has a carrying capacity of sixty.

PIONEER MEMBER DIES.

SOLDIERS' HOME, Feb. 23.—Patrick Colbert, one of the pioneer members of the Home, died last night. Notwithstanding the name, Colbert, who was born in New York City, was, as he used to say, "American from legs up;" and doubtless had it been left to him to chose would have preferred to depart this life on Washington's Birthday above all other dates. Colbert was chief farmer in the early days, under Govs. Treichel and Rowland. His principal enjoyment in life, however, was centered on affairs Masonic. Together with the late Gov. Rowland, Col. E. F. Brown, inspector-general, the present chief engineer, Dobbings, and a few other kindred spirits, he was most assiduous in the advancement of a Masonic club among the veterans here, which has only within a few months developed into Veteran Lodge, No. 378, F. and A. M., of Sawtelle, with a membership exceeded only by one or two other lodges in the State. He was a thirty-second degree Mason, and was a member of the Los Angeles Council, of the Los Angeles Commandery and of the Shriners.

Colbert, who served in Co. C, Thirty-seventh Illinois Infantry, Col. (afterward Gen.) J. Black's regiment, reenlisted at the expiration of his first term, and served until the close of the war. He was admitted to the Home in 1892, and died February 22; aged 63. He leaves one sister, Mrs. Ellen Carney, residing at Rochester, Minn.

The Consumption of Rubber

"The average citizen of the United States seems to have consumed half his own weight in rubber the year just ended," says a report issued by the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor. The average per capita consumption was seventy-six pounds. The amount of sugar consumed was 80 pounds, at a cost of over $300,000,000.

Of this enormous total only one-fifth was produced in this country, the other one-fifth was imported from our island possessions and the remaining three-fifths, or 3,864,000,000 pounds, from foreign countries.

Of the production of rubber in the United States last year more than one-half was from reclaimed rubber, little more than one-half from guayule, and the quantity of gutta percha imported into American consumption was 600,000 pounds.

One treatment will convince the most skeptical, and that is absolutely free. This offer holds good this month only. Simple catarrh cases are cured in a very few treatments.

Importance of a Cure

There is danger from contagion to the catarrh victim in many clouds of dust that blows.

While catarrh does not cause all cases of consumption, it is also true that all those who have consumption have been subject to catarrh. All consumptives were catarrh victims. They took cold. Catarrh had prepared the way for consumption. Tubercular consumption ever requires a break in the membranes which line the breathing tubes. Catarrh furnishes the broken places in the form of raw spots. The consumptive germs cannot enter the blood of one whose bodily health is perfect, whose blood is rich and pure, unless there should exist in such person's body a broken sore or inflamed discharging spot where these germs may lodge and enter the system. Catarrh forms just such broken places, and those persons whose throats and Bronchial Tubes are raw and inflamed are ever exposed to the danger of acquiring consumption. If the people were only alive to the fact that if they attended to their throat and bronchial tubes and allowed those skilled in the treatment of these parts to cure them there would be but few cases of consumption. To show what can be done in the way of preventing consumption, nothing is so convincing as this: Among the hosts that are treated at our offices every year scarcely a person who has been under care has been known to develop lung disease. This proof is beyond question, that by curing catarrh the development of consumption is prevented.

A WORD TO THE SICK

Shores & Shores make a specialty of curing old, deep-seated Chronic Nervous and Private diseases, and they have cured hundreds. A friendly talk with Drs. Shores will cost you nothing and may save your life.

The Steinway Double Crown Of Honor

Juries Reports--Vienna and Paris Expositions

The most flattering recognition ever given a piano-maker—in fact, Steinway's double crown of honor—is found in the construction of every American, and in nearly every European piano. It is in the adoption without material change of the early Steinway improvements, which have become public property by expiration of the Steinway patent rights. That this is no mere assertion is amply vouched for by the unanimous report of the Jury of Awards at the International Exposition at Vienna as far back as 1873, from which is extracted the following sentence: "More than two-thirds of the pianofortes exhibited were imitations of Steinway instruments," and concludes that "it is much to be deplored that the celebrated path-breaking firm of Steinway & Sons, to whom the entire pianoforte industry is so much indebted, did not exhibit."

These principles of real piano-making, described by the Jury on Musical Instruments at the Paris Exposition of 1867 as "improvements, the great merit of which cannot be doubted except by settled prejudice," raised the piano tone from a puerile tinkle to the power and dignity of orchestral ensemble, but because of their erroneous application the greater number of these imitations have not been improved, and the Steinway characteristics and tone have never been approached.

We Sell Steinway Pianos

CIRCUIT COURT'S RULING OUTLAWS ALL SALOONS IN UNITED STATES.

Movement Started in Los Angeles Leads to a Momentous Decision—"Nightmare," Say Liquor Men.

AS the fruit of work done and an address delivered by Dr. Ervin S. Chapman of Los Angeles, the Anti-Saloon League reads the doom of every licensed liquor-selling place in the United States. Circuit Judge Samuel R. Artman of Indiana has decided in effect that under the Constitution the saloon cannot be legalized but must be outlawed, and the Supreme Court of the United States will be asked to pass final judgment on the momentous issue involved. The Anti-Saloon League believes there is no question of a favorable decision from its point of view, and adverse to the liquor interests. The saloon men of Los Angeles do not yet take the matter seriously. They say it is "only another long-haired nightmare." But the opposing forces say they see a great light ahead and will fight until it shines upon all. The mightiest battle of its kind is under way.

If a decision handed down by a circuit judge of the State of Indiana is affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, every saloon in the United States will be compelled to close its doors.

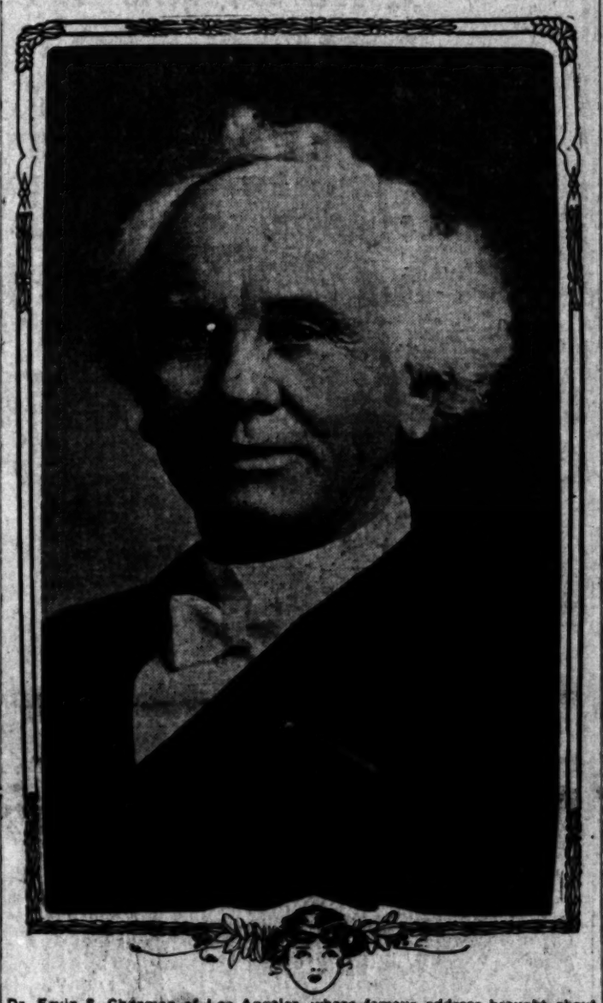
If the highest tribunal in the land does not stultify itself, the anti-saloon people declare, which is beyond the pale of probability, it will affirm the decision of the circuit judge in Indiana, and there will be no saloons.

The decision of the Indiana jurist is declared based upon fundamental law, and upon a point that has been overlooked since the Constitution of the United States was created. The point is not embodied in the letter of the law, but is taken from the spirit that authorized the making of the law itself. It is based upon the fact that law is made to uphold what is right and to forbid what is wrong. Then it follows quickly and quotes several decisions of the United States Supreme Court itself that the saloon is inherently vicious and a menace to the public welfare, and as such cannot be legalized by law—i.e., a license.

This is the opinion of the Anti-Saloon League of Southern California, from which organization sprung the first move that has resulted in the idea that the saloon is unconstitutional, and, therefore, cannot exist, spreading throughout the United States.

The saloon men of Los Angeles yesterday pooh-poohed the court finding that their business is unconstitutional. They said that it is "only another long-haired nightmare," and that they see no occasion to bestir themselves to oppose the move any more than they have always fought to maintain their own interests.

Judge Samuel R. Artman of Indiana, who holds that the saloon business has no legal existence, and therefore cannot be licensed by the State. The Supreme Court of the United States will pass on his decision, and it may knock out every saloon in the country.



Dr. Ervin S. Chapman of Los Angeles, whose famous address brought about the decision which will take the granting of saloon licenses in the United States before the highest tribunal, and may be a vital blow to the liquor traffic.

DECISION THAT HITS ALL THE SALOONS.

HERE is the decision handed down by Judge Artman, which is the first judicial recognition of the declared inability of the law to license a saloon, and which takes the subject to the highest court:

The question this Court has to decide in the case is, Can the State, under the guise of a police regulation, looking to the preservation of public morals, license the saloon business?

It is the settled law of the land that any occupation that naturally and inherently endangers the health, peace, safety, morals and welfare of the people is unlawful and a public nuisance. A public nuisance may be abated, under the civil law, by injunction, and, if the nuisance keeper fails to obey the injunction, he must face the court for contempt. In all probability its remedy would be preferable to criminal proceedings.

IMMORAL AND UNLAWFUL.

In the absence of a license, the police power of the State regards any business, the inherent character, tendency and effect of which is to destroy the public health, the public morals or the public safety, as immoral and unlawful. The Legislature of Indiana has enacted its condemnation of the business by requiring that the nature of alcoholic drinks and their effects on the human system shall be included in the branches to be regularly taught in the common schools of the State. It is not making the case too strong to say that it is within the knowledge of every private citizen of average information as to current events that the business kills many, makes widows and orphans, fills almshouses, jails, penitentiaries, orphanages and insane asylums; that it frenzies the brain and directs the murderer's hand to plunge the fatal knife and discharge the deadly weapon.

It must be held that the State cannot, under the guise of a license, delegate to the saloon business a legal existence, because to hold that it can is to hold that the State may sell and delegate the right to make widows and orphans, the right to break up homes, the right to create misery and crime, the right to make murderers, the right to fill orphanages, poorhouses, insane asylums, jails and penitentiaries and the right to furnish subjects for the hangman's gallows.

NOT IN THIS COURT.

The Supreme Court of Indiana, the Supreme Court of many other States and the Supreme Court of the United States have already so far passed the middle of the stream upon the question involved in this case that return would now be more difficult than to go over. "Go over" is merely to draw the natural, logical and inevitable conclusion from the declarations and judgments of the courts. To return would mean either to abandon the adjudication that the saloon business is unlawful at common law, or to hold that a business which has been adjudged by the courts, to be unlawful, at common law, because it naturally and inherently endangers the health, comfort, safety, morals and welfare of the people, may be legalized for money. Some court may so hold in this case, but it will not be done by this court. If it is done by any court it must be done by the court that has already held the business to be unlawful, because of its inherently destructive effects upon society.

With due appreciation of the responsibilities of the occasion, conscious of my obligations, under my oath to Almighty God and to my fellow men, I cannot, by a judgment of this court, authorize the granting of a saloon license, and the demurrer to the amended remonstrance is, therefore, overruled, the amended remonstrance is sustained and the application is dismissed at the costs of the application.

Some of the proprietors of saloons acknowledged that they had not heard of the new phase of the subject, and do not understand it, but united with their brethren in saying that it is simply a mare's nest. It seems that the saloon-keepers do not recognize the rod that may be in pickle for them.

THE BUGLE CALL.

The announcement a few days ago that Judge Samuel R. Artman of the Circuit Court of Indiana had rendered a decision refusing an appealed application for liquor license on the ground that a saloon is inherently vicious and inimical to the public welfare, was welcomed as a bugle call to the Anti-Saloon League of America. Immediately letters of congratulation began to pour into the Los Angeles headquarters of the Southern California branch. The movement originated here, and the originator of it is Rev. Ervin S. Chapman, superintendent of the State Anti-Saloon League.

The importance that is attached to this decision cannot be over-estimated. All the work of the prohibition organizations during the last few years is as naught compared with this one legal decision. It has changed the tactics of every anti-whisky propaganda that exists in the United States. Heretofore the temperance folk have fought the saloon as a thing legalized, but of an evil nature. Hereafter they will fight it from a legal standpoint, exactly the same as slavery, lotteries and gambling have been fought and conquered.

They declare they have been shown that the saloon cannot exist under the laws of the nation, and that all that is necessary to abolish every one of them is that the Indiana case, which is now before the Supreme Court of that State, be carried one step higher to the Supreme Court of the United States and there meet its doom.

DR. CHAPMAN OPENS FIRE.

Dr. Chapman, who is as widely known throughout the United States in temperance work as he is in Southern California, delivered a lecture last summer in this city, entitled "A Stainless Flag." In this lecture, it is claimed, he demonstrated clearly that the saloon is an illegal liquor, and blazed the path straight up to the Supreme Court of the United States, from which he quoted decisions to show that the saloon is unlawful. This lecture took like wildfire, and Dr. Chapman delivered it throughout the East in thirty principal cities. His

HOW DR. CHAPMAN POINTS THE WAY.

FOLLOWING are excerpts of the principal points made by Dr. Ervin S. Chapman in his famous address which was the origin of the present movement to carry the granting of licenses to the Supreme Court of the United States.

(1.) That the divine and human concur in establishing and maintaining civil government as an agency to safeguard human interests and to promote human welfare.

(2.) That civil government is unyieldingly held to its obligations, not by any written constitutions or human statutes, but by unwritten eternal and immutable law, the requirements of which it cannot rightfully cast off or disregard.

(3.) That those immutable laws require civil government not only to foster, encourage and promote what is right but also to imperatively forbid and exercise all its powers to prevent whatever is wrong, whatever is injurious or harmful to human welfare, whatever is malia in se.

(4.) The legislative department of civil government must enact only such statutes as are in accord with immutable law and promotive of human welfare and happiness.

(5.) The judiciary must apply to all institutions and customs and to all human statutes the touchstone of immutable right and must declare invalid each and every statute enacted by the Legislature, which conflicts with that supreme law, and brand as unlawful all human pursuits and institutions which are injurious to the interests of society.

(6.) The degree of public enlightenment measures the ability of public officials to discover and read the immutable law of right and to bring civil government into conformity with it.

(7.) Our national Supreme Court, in decisions which it has rendered, has designated the liquor traffic as malia in se by characterizing it as Harmful to material prosperity,

Injurious to life,
Destructive of manhood,
Disastrous to peace and happiness,
Fatal to morals and,
Productive of crime and misery.

(8.) That court having thus characterized the liquor traffic will surely declare that traffic malia in se and hence unlawful and incapable of being granted legislative standing or protection by any branch of civil government either national or local.

(9.) Whenever the public mind has become sufficiently enlightened and the public conscience sufficiently quickened to justify and make effective such a decision, our national Supreme Court, which has always led public sentiment respecting this question, will place its brand of outlawry upon that traffic which McKinley characterized "as the most degrading and ruinous of all human pursuits."

MRS. SADIE TOMLINSON, society woman whose husband confessed to her his love for another and who secured a divorce that he might marry the other.

HIS ROMANCE HER TRAGEDY.

Beauty Wins Husband of a Devoted Wife.

Well-Known Society Woman Will Return Here.

Nevada Wedding Follows Her Chicago Divorce.

Friends of rMs. Sadie Tomlinson are looking forward to give her a heartfelt welcome to Pasadena and Los Angeles. Blythe and happy she left them hardly a year ago, a wife beloved, a brilliant, fascinating woman. She is returning with a saddened heart, a spirit subdued, though hidden by that veil of womanly pride which so often conceals the tragedy of a romance. Dreamlike is her happiness, which has fled upon the vampire wings of passion. But her friends will try to awake her to a new life of friendship in the sunny Southland.

In the exclusive social circles of this city and the Crown of the Valley G. E. Tomlinson and his beautiful wife were among the most welcome guests in scores of homes. They were devoted to each other and were inseparable companions, comrades in all their jaunts, their visits, the while basking in the sunshine of love and content.

Mr. Tomlinson is a mining man, engineer, assayer and broker. In this city he had an assay office, but gave it up to become assayer for the Copper Queen Company of Bisbee, Ariz. Soon afterwards he organized the Copper Glance Mining Company of Bisbee, and became its secretary. In connection with this company he made a small fortune and removed to Chicago, where he opened a broker's office in the Stock Exchange building.

There had been times in the life of Mr. and Mrs. Tomlinson when fortune had not smiled, when dollars were few, but kisses were many. They were the the happy days. Through it all Mrs. Tomlinson had cheered her husband, did the housework and spurred him to greater effort.

BLINDNESS OF FATE.

Now it seemed that fate was kind. In Chicago they made for themselves a beautiful home. It was furnished more than comfortably. But as came prosperity love was crowded out. In her new home Mrs. Tomlinson felt that there was something missing, something worth more to her than what had been gained in fine furniture and lace curtains. She realized later what it was.

Soon after opening his broker's office Mr. Tomlinson found that he needed a stenographer, and he advertised for one. From among those who answered, he chose Miss Margaret Paula Irwin. She was pretty, petite and fascinating as a bud of womanhood. Mrs. Tomlinson is slightly older than her husband.

Desperately, as though plunging over a precipice, Tomlinson fell in love with his pretty stenographer. His voice took on a softer note as he dictated cold financial facts in business letters. Finally he dictated his confession of love and found the beautiful eyes so close to his clouded in tears.

Life was beginning again for him as with her. Forgotten were the old days, the old vows at the altar, the principle duty, the love that had held his heart as in a bed of rose leaves. Forgotten was the devotion of a loving wife, of their days of stress, of comradeship and kisses. Veiled were the days of his life and the future was bright with a false dawn.

Then came the day when with ruthless hand the husband tore from the soul of his wife, from her holy of holies, the curtain of trust embroidered by her fancy with the emblems of love. Now a shroud hides the dead days.

FOR LOVE OF A WOMAN.

How she pleaded with him, how she begged him by all that a man holds holy to be his old self again. For the sake of her love she tore her pride to shreds—to weave them later into a mantle of reserve. Her heart's blood distilled in crystal drops from beseeching eyes. She held out her arms to him—in vain.

At first he spoke double edged words. Words that killed, but left no mark. He told her of his love for that other, that between them all was over. He would be a friend to her, would respect her always. He pitied her, but he also

DEVELOPMENT SOCIETY DINNER TO BE SEALON'S EVENT.

Representative Men from Many Parts of State and Nation Will Advise Together for Welfare of California—Among Other Things Good Roads Will Receive a Boost.

The importance of the banquet to be given Monday evening to the Development Society of California by Loomis Brothers at the Hotel Angelus becomes daily more apparent. At the festal board will be assembled men whose influence is far-reaching. Much is heard nowadays about the value of the "far look." On Monday evening there will be the "far look," but it will not be an idle gaze. Looking into the future will be only to secure guidance for action.

The banquet will not be a local affair merely. The guests will be drawn from many parts of the State and whatever action may be taken will be designed for the whole commonwealth. The occasion, in short, is to be one of the events in the business history of California and from it may date the broad development of the whole Pacific Coast which conditions, present and to come, demand.

As has already been stated, this banquet has two immediate objects in view—the promotion of good roads and the setting forth of the purposes of the Development Society. The society hopes by thorough and judicious advertising throughout the East to induce more people of the better class to adopt California as their home. The State wants more farmers, artisans, business men and capitalists and to secure them, it is believed, it is only necessary to scatter broadcast reliable information of the wonderful opportunities which this State affords.

The banquet will begin at 8 o'clock and speaking at 9:30 o'clock, speeches being limited to fifteen minutes each. The affair will be adjourned at 11:15 o'clock, so that out-of-town guests will have no difficulty in reaching their homes.

W. L. Green is coming over from Pasadena in his private car and will bring with him Tracy Drake, Walter Raymond, C. W. Gates, Ernest H. May, James A. Culbertson, Prof. C. C. Bragdon, Seward Simons, Gen. M. C. Wentworth, J. C. Brainard, Dr. Rudolph Schiffman, Thomas Earley, Gen. W. L. Alexander, D. M. Linnard, A. J. Bertoneau, Lon F. Chapin, John Lambert, J. H. Holmes, J. AGED EX-MAYOR DANCES.

First Head of Indianapolis's City Government Celebrates His Ninety-first Birthday Here.

James F. McCready, first Mayor of Indianapolis, Ind., but now a loyal Angeleño, celebrated his 91st birthday on Friday evening at the home of his son, Benjamin F. McCready, No. 1472 Sunset boulevard.

Four generations of the McCreadys were present to participate in the event. Beside the guest of honor there was his son, Benjamin; his grandson, Frank W. McCready, and his great grandson, Norman McCready, aged 4 years.

Many Indianapolis people were among the guests, there being over fifty callers at the home during the evening to tender their congratulations to the aged ex-Mayor. He was the recipient of many gifts and remembrances.

During the evening there was dancing, and no one on the floor more thoroughly enjoyed this than did McCready, who danced with grace and vigor.

BORING COLORADO NARROWS.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

YUMA (Ariz.) Feb. 22.—Borings are now being conducted by Engineer John Carille to determine the character of the bottom of the Colorado at the Narrows, just above Yuma, between Prison Hill, and the Indian School. At that point, it is expected to strike a deep bed of hard pan, which, while not bed rock, will yet be a substitute upon which to found the piers of the new railroad which John D. Spreckels is preparing to building eastward from San Diego. Mr. Carillo is a Southern Pacific employé, a fact which aroused some suspicion locally, denied in San Diego, for it is claimed that the road is an absolutely independent proposition. It is understood that the route westward from Yuma will practically be that laid out in the old Tom Scott survey for the original Texas Pacific road.

It is understood that trouble is being experienced at Parker, in northern Yuma county, in finding a safe foundation for the bridge of the new Arizona and California Railroad. At a depth of eighty feet a stratum of hard pan was struck. This was pierced by the drills, when a soft stratum again was encountered, together with a tremendous flow of water. It is believed that the only safe bridge at that point will be a cantilever, similar to that erected by the Santa Fé below Needles.

Yuma is afflicted with a very curious kind of firebug, believed to be a man, who, dressed in woman's clothes, flits around the outskirts of a village at night, with incendiary intent. This night prowler has been responsible for several fires, which have been discovered before much damage has been done. He is believed to be demented, yet is sharp enough to absolutely conceal his identity from the searching officers.

F. C. Grimes of Los Angeles is preparing to establish a creamery in Yuma, in which a part of the stock shall be held by farmers of the valley. Three hundred head of cows will be brought from the vicinity of Los Angeles in the fall time, when they can be passed across the Colorado without conflicting with the live stock laws of the Territory, which forbid the importation of cattle from California or Mexico, save in the coldest months in the year.

Within a short time, hundreds of laborers will be liberated from work at the intake at the Imperial canal, when it is expected that most active operations will be commenced upon the Laguna dam. The men released will have no difficulty in finding work, as railroad agents are already on the ground recruiting them to go to various points in the Southwest. Several hundred of the workmen at the intake are Indians. They are very efficient laborers, but were troublesome from the fact that most of them absolutely refused to work on Sunday.

As a result of the deliberations, several resolutions were passed.

The first reads "that it is the sense of this meeting that the conditions in Southern California demand the speedy establishment of a George Junior Republic, and that we count ourselves peculiarly fortunate in securing the promise of hearty cooperation and assistance of F. R. George; and that we believe that at least $25,000 should at once be secured to buy the necessary land and buildings and pay the expenses incidental to the establishment of such a republic; and that further amounts be secured from time to time as may be needed to establish and maintain such a republic."

It was also resolved that "the George Junior Republic Committee, Valentine Peyton, chairman, heretofore appointed by the association, be continued in office, and that Mr. Peyton be authorized to add such new members as he may desire, and that the committee shall take all needful steps to raise such money and secure such land, and to that end they may incorporate or cause to be incorporated a corporation or association to take over such work; and that subscriptions shall be payable to the treasurer of this association, Leonard Merrill, until such incorporation or association is formed."

Thus the association has pointed out a definite person to whom subscriptions may be sent, and started the work in earnest. The members feel handicapped because many who would ordinarily help are interested in the Y.W.C.A. funds, but the urgency of raising at least $5000 in a short time is felt so strongly that they are prepared to do what they can.

THEIR SILVER WEDDING.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Rogers of No. 236 West Twenty-eighth street celebrated their silver wedding anniversary Saturday evening with a reception at their home. The parlors were prettily decorated with potted palms and ferns and white carnations; the drawing room was decorated in red carnations and ferns, and violets and ferns were used in the dining-room. Place cards at the table were heart-shaped and adorned with silver bells, and the table was adorned with silver candelabra and white peas and maiden-hair ferns. The host and hostess were assisted in receiving by their daughters, Mrs. C. B. Miner and Mrs. T. R. Lamb. During the evening Miss Ethel Beal gave musical selections; Mrs. J. Richardson gave a whistling solo and Mrs. Thompson gave a reading, "Wedding Bells." Guests at this anniversary included Mr. and Mrs. Lue Mittendorf, Mr. and Mrs. G. PRACTICED MANY YEARS.

Funeral of Physician of Long Standing in New York—Body to Rest at Evergreen.

The funeral of Dr. J. Clarke Thomas was conducted at the First Congregational Church yesterday afternoon by Rev. William Horace Day. The body was placed in a vault at Evergreen Cemetery.

For thirty-eight years Dr. Thomas was actively engaged in practice in New York City. He had his office at his residence, No. 107 West Forty-seventh street, all that time, and those who knew of his long career there and at the resorts of Indian Harbor and old Greenwich, on Long Island Sound, which he chose for the summer home of his family, declare his success was remarkable. Long practice never dulled his kindness, and to many this was one of the best of healers. He took a personal interest in his patients, notwithstanding his busy life and constant calls upon his time.

DR. J. CLARKE THOMAS.

J. Clarke Thomas was born on Brooklyn Heights in 1844. His father was D. D. Thomas, one of the founders of the New York Produce Exchange. He graduated at Yale in 1864, and was also a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, and an associate of the Society of Alumni of Bellevue Hospital, in which he was an interne before he commenced the private practice of medicine. He was a member of the Republican Club, in which he was chairman of the House Committee for five years.

His first wife was Miss Susie Beecher Smith, daughter of Prof. Smith of New Haven. She died in early life, and after several years as a widower he married Miss Blanche Evans, who lately came to Los Angeles with him in the hope of gaining better health.

He leaves a widow, three daughters, Julia, wife of Dr. Harmon Smith of New York; Amy, wife of L. T. Golding of the News-Press, a daily paper at St. Joseph, Mo., and Mrs. Susie Eastman of New York. He leaves also a brother and sister—William Thomas of Morristown, N. J., a member of the New York Produce Exchange; and Mrs. Lottie Thomas of New York City.

In Vatican circles it is stated that a communication has been sent to Cardinal Richard, archbishop of Paris, that he must conduct negotiations with the French government, according to the instructions of the Pope.

The Legislature is thinking of protecting deer. It is a dear Legislature.

At last is the world able to congratulate little Queen Wilhelmina on her choice of a husband.

The extermination of bachelors is not a question for legislation, but for the wiles of women.

There are people who long to die and are yet so poor that they can't afford to buy railroad tickets.

The future American will have long legs, due to the fact that his ancestors had theirs pulled a good deal.

Does Mr. Cleveland realize that his idea of allowing only married men to vote places this country at the mercy of women?

If Senator Charlie Bell could get hold of a good sling he might yet issue from the present session of the Legislature as its David.

We regretfully admit that there are thousands of persons in this country who could hardly wait until the Thaw trial resumed.

Even if bachelors were to be deprived of the franchise they would still have a long lead on the other fellows with the girls.

It must be awful to live in certain parts of the benighted States of the East where churches are blown up with dynamite.

The president of Cornell University thinks it an easy matter to get rid of the trusts. Everything looks easy to a college professor.

Because Mayor Dunne gave Chicago a freak administration, Chicago has indorsed him with an enthusiasm that knows no bounds.

What we want in this country is a free and untrammeled ballot, but how are we to have it if only married men shall be allowed to vote?

Johnstown, Pa., continues to be good for a thrill of terror every time it appears in the date lines at the head of the newspaper dispatches.

Schurman is "agin" both Bryan and Roosevelt. But the nation is not yet brave enough to experiment with a government by college professors.

They had an orchestra at the cat show despite the fact that cats are able to furnish a certain kind of music themselves when they are in the humor.

The fact that his wife's skirts have been somewhat bedraggled in the mire does not seem to deter Harry Thaw from making use of them as a place to hide.

Warships such as Uncle Sam is now about to build weigh rather too much to be called peace doves, but we have no doubt they will fulfill the functions admirably.

It is fortunate for Grover Cleveland that the country did not regard him in the same light that he now regards himself during that half century that he was a bachelor.

If the railroads are made to pay damages for all the killed and injured for whose death and injuries they are responsible it is difficult to see how they are to escape bankruptcy.

When a railway train can't bump into another train it jumps the rails and falls over a bridge or something. Any way, only so passengers can be either killed or maimed for life.

We suggest that the "busting" of the trusts be placed in the hands of Dr. Schurman, in order that the country may have an opportunity to attend to other matters of equal importance.

We trust that those cats that failed to receive prizes at the show will refrain from howling over it o' nights on the back fences of the neighborhoods to which they are permanently attached.

Mr. Bryan has a laugh coming. He repeatedly challenged Roger Sullivan to go to the people for vindication. At last Roger did so, and his friends are still endeavoring to extricate him from the débris.

While we do so with regret, we are still constrained to state that the coming crop of orange blossoms will be far in excess of the needs of the weddings that are scheduled between now and the end of June.

There may be people in Southern California who are not suited with everything, but they are not the farmers. Conditions this spring could not be better if the husbandman had the making of them himself.

We can get along very well without race tracks in California where the sport is merely a means toward the end that the touts and tin-horn gamblers may fleece that portion of the public that has softening of the brain.

THE SALOONS HARD HIT.

There is small wonder that our friends, the anti-saloon men, are in a state of non-alcoholic exhilaration over the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Indiana that a license issued in any form or by any authority to a saloon is unconstitutional and illegal.

On another page of this issue, The Times gives the remarkable decision of Judge Artman. The significance of the decision was not appreciated when first announced; but as it has "soaked in," so to speak, the possible consequences have become apparent. The effect of it, if sustained by the Supreme Court, would be to outlaw the saloon business completely. If the Indiana court's decision stands it will prove one of the most sweeping and revolutionizing blows ever dealt at vice by any tribunal. When the country awakens to the full force and meaning of this most remarkable interpretation of law, it will fairly gasp.

Judge Artman rules that inasmuch as law is created to suppress vice and not to promote it, and as the saloon is in its nature vicious and productive of crime, it is beyond the legal power of any State or county or city or of even the United States to license saloons; that the law cannot issue a permit to law-violation; that the fundamental law of the land, the law superior to all laws, forbids the legalizing of vice, to forestall which all laws are designed.

The moral logic of the decision is apparent; but whether it will withstand all legal tests is another question. The great expounders must needs hammer at it. A flaw or two may be found in it.

One is not justified in rushing to the conclusion that all saloons are to be abolished in consequence of this decision. The liquor interests will not permit it to become full established without a tremendous struggle. It enunciates what is practically a new principle and it will be scouted by many sincere doctors of the law having no affiliations with the liquor business.

But it can be said that Judge Artman's decision is a stupendous victory for the anti-saloonists and may well give them great encouragement. As for the liquor dealers, it is evident that they do not yet realize what has hit them.

ODDITIES OF OUR FOREIGN COMMERCE.

In advance sheets issued by the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor, attention is drawn to the fact in connection with our foreign commerce for 1906, that in several lines where we are large exporters we are also large importers, and vice versa.

For instance, the following:

	Exported.	Imported.
Automobiles	$ 4,409,186	$ 6,000,000
Copper	90,000,000	37,000,000
Raw cotton	412,000,000	11,000,000
Cotton waste		1,000,000
Cotton goods	43,000,000	69,000,000
Coffee	3,870,000	72,000,000
Bananas	1,333,000	11,500,000
Champagne (why not American makes?)		5,855,000

Of our automobiles, $1,000,000 went to Great Britain, and another $1,000,000 worth to other European manufacturing countries.

We produce half the world's copper, and export $90,000,000 worth, yet we import $37,000,000 worth. Doubtless that is because of our superior smelting and refining facilities. We get the copper ore of Canada and Mexico.

Why the United States, the greatest cotton producing country of the world (three-fourths) imports $11,000,000 worth of Egyptian cotton is because of its long and silky fiber, for use in high-grade cottons, and for mixing with silk in manufacturing.

The mystery of all is, why, with our fields full of cotton and our country full of mills, we import $69,000,000 worth of manufactures of cotton. True, part of it is for laces, embroideries, edgings, insertings, etc., made by hand labor, yet the $69,000,000 also includes $12,000,000 for bleached, dyed, and colored cloths, $3,000,000 for cotton, thread and yarns, and over $3,000,000 for knit goods. Our nearly $4,000,000 export of green or raw coffee mainly represents shipments by Porto Rico and Hawaii to foreign countries. Still, we reexported 13,500,000 pounds of coffe of foreign production—chiefly to Canada and Mexico. Another great surprise is our exporting $1,333,000 worth of bananas, and importing $11,500,000 worth. Why did we not import that much less and not let a single banana get away from our waiting mouths? One of two things is clear. Either we are not keeping pace with our increasing population in the drinking of that "wine of midnight," champagne, or else we are using more of the "made in America" brands. Our champagne imports fourteen years ago were 356,000 quarts, and in 1906, only 394,000 quarts. We have "gone it" far heavier on other luxuries during that period. In diamonds, for instance, from $14,000,000 to $44,000,000, and in laces and embroideries from $16,000,000 to $44,000,000. Curiously, too, the price of the champagne we import now is no higher than the price of fourteen years ago.

A gratifying notation is that our imports of tin plate have decreased about 35 per cent. from 1,000,000,000 pounds in 1891 to 121,000,000 pounds in 1906 fiscal year. That means more American work wages, and profits. Better still, in the same year we also exported 120,500,000 pounds of tin plate of foreign production, in the shape of cans, boxes, and other manufactured articles.

A NATION IN SHORT PANTS.

It was not to be expected that Japan would be pleased by any concession made by President Roosevelt and the United States, for the Japanese do not like to take the position of petitioners. Submission to their will is what they aspire to command from all the nations of the earth, and the idea of accepting concessions is bitterly distasteful to them.

In the past sixty years the basis of their conviction of superiority to all other peoples has undergone considerable change, but there has been no weakening of that conviction. Throughout the first half of the nineteenth century that delusion was based on their ability to maintain their own economic, artistic and moral existence apart from the rest of the world, in scorn of all that made up the life of the "lesser nations." The first of the brown men who suggested that there might be something in the special activities of other peoples and other forms of thought were punished with death.

A change came o'er the spirit of their dream. They deigned to accept, at last, certain industrial methods which had not been invented by themselves. In the application of these borrowed ideas they have appeared to excel, in many instances, the originators thereof. Their feeling was that they had taken these ideas only for convenience, not from necessity. They could have evolved them more perfectly themselves, they believed, had they chosen to spare the time from the nobler work of perfecting their esthetic sense and military valor; but what need when the "inferior peoples" were doing the work for them?

When they wanted new lands to colonize with their surplus population they "vanquished China" (though half the Chinese did not learn that a war was going on,) and, later, Russia (with 95 per cent. of the Russians 7000 miles away.) Their self-flattering conviction that they have but to reach out and grasp all that their hands and minds aspire to has been greatly exalted.

The Japanese nation is much like a precocious child in many respects, acutely conscious of its own marvelous qualities and serenely unconscious of its limitations. Is it not chiefly as the child among nations that it has challenged our wonder and often our admiration? A nation in short pants doing many things which only sage old nations have succeeded in doing before is indeed a wondrous sight; but a nation that has reached the stature of manhood, still acting like a precocious and spoiled child, offers a different spectacle.

Japan, as an infant, has been the wonder of the world. Is Japan, grown up, to be the laughing stock?

THE CITY'S BUSINESS.

Municipal conditions and prospects in Los Angeles are in excellent shape since the three pregnant decisions of the past week—these three:

The determination of the City Council to attempt no more bond issues until the great aqueduct flotation shall have been disposed of.

Their decision to submit the question of the issuance of the entire $23,000,000 of water bonds to one vote, thus avoiding possibility of future complications.

The vote against annexation of a large area of sparsely settled territory that would have been a source of great embarrassment to Los Angeles if incorporated.

The Council, the civic organizations and the citizens have coöperated cordially in all these matters. That is the way to achieve results—to get together. A little private political party or a committee of fifteen dominated by one cannot run the city.

When the new taxes come in, the city, with good management at the City Hall, will be on easy street. There will be money to keep the outfall sewer agoing. With careful weighing of every dollar appropriated, $100,000 can be set aside for fire department extension. It should be borne in mind, however, that although it will be wise to spend the money for our own protection, the fire insurance companies will probably be as unreasonable as ever if we double our fire fighting facilities.

Los Angeles has the lightest fire losses of all the large cities of the country; but do the fire insurance companies take that into consideration?

WHY IN SECRET?

The announcement from New York of the organization of the society of "The Affiliated Knights of Progress" will fall upon the country in the nature of a shock. It is a secret organization, in which the members, behind closed doors and with the aid of a solemn and picturesque ritual, bind themselves by an oath, sworn presumably on the Bible, to lose their jobs sooner than do a wrong thing.

There can be no doubt that there is a crying need for men and women to work together and individually for the world's good, and to strive earnestly against evil and sin and crime. The world is not as good as it might be. In truth it is about nearly as bad as it has ever been, though not quite. Some distinct progress has been made in the right direction. More people go to church now than ever before. And the Thaws and that sort of people are far from being as common as they were in the days when mankind was not as enlightened and as well directed as at the present time.

What constitutes the shock in the organization of "The Affiliated Knights of Progress" is the idea that reform may be accomplished only in secret and by means of oath-bound rituals. With all due affection for the promoters of the society, and giving them full credit for their excellent intentions, we fear they are on the wrong tack. The thing is obviously inconsistent.

The way to do good is to do it in the open light of day. Virtue loves the light, which is its safeguard. Away with the peepholes and "high signs" in the "Affiliated Knights." They are on the right road. But let them stand out where we can all get a look at them.

PERSONAL.

James Smith of James Smith & Co. has gone to San Francisco for a few days, on pleasure and business.

Robert H. Austin of Oakland is at Mrs. Kilvington's, No. 622 West Thirty-fifth street, for a few days. Mrs. Kilvington is very ill.

MAY NOT BE A BAD DREAM.

THE LANCER.

Some of us still hug the delusion that Congress is a lawmaking body, representing the people and possessing delegated power to transact their business in accordance with the judgment of a majority of its members. We go through the motions of electing representatives, send them to Washington, tell them what we want them to do and pay them for doing it, and sometimes they pluck up enough courage to introduce bills embodying our wishes. But they have nothing to say about what shall be done with the bills; they do not constitute the Congress of the United States. Congress is an old joker named Uncle Joe Cannon.

There is before the bodies pretending to have power to pass laws a bill purporting to appropriate money for building levees on the Colorado for the protection of $700,000,000 worth of public and private property, and to provide for acquisition of certain irrigation works by the Reclamation Service. The bill was passed by the Senate at request of President Roosevelt. It isn't a very good bill, perhaps, but it is better than no bill, and the President and the officers of the Reclamation Service and many others urge that it pass.

Two of California's alleged representatives in Congress went to Joe Cannon and humbly begged that he permit the House to consider the bill and vote upon it. Our beloved ruler spat tobacco juice and told the two fantastic futilities that he would not allow the bill to be considered because he did not approve of appropriations to aid irrigation.

The reason for refusal is a detail of little or no significance. The fact that Joe Cannon will not permit Congress to consider a bill is very significant. Even more significant is the humble submission of Congress to the arbitrary dictation of one of its members, who seems to be an obstinate old person, apparently possessed by the notion that nobody else has any comprehension of public affairs.

And still we prate of representative government and the will of the people.

Stench from the Studios.

Mrs. Thaw, questioned by Jerome, tells of parties in New York "studios," attended by men and women, at which women drank too much wine and told obscene stories. She says Stanford White told some of the dirty stories.

The Associated Press report, quite matter of fact, says: "At this point a ten-minute recess was taken to air the courtroom."

It will take ten million minutes to air the country when the loathsome exposure of New York's "Bohemian" life is ended, and maudlin sympathy for the wronged innocent, who took money from her betrayer and shared it with another paramour, has slobbered itself out. Yet some good may come from the lifting of the lid of New York and the belching forth of the stench from its "studios," which are often inferior in decency and morality to the establishments subject to police raids. Publicity is the most efficient check for some evils, and this muck-raking of the Tenderloin seems to be as necessary to the public moral health as sewer cleaning to physical health.

The Human Brute.

In fairness to the thousands of men who enjoy boxing contests and attend prize fights in Los Angeles, I assure the readers of reports of those affairs that descriptions of the behavior of the crowd of spectators should not be taken literally. It is not a fact that the crowd is bloodthirsty and demands gore and slaughter. The troglodytes who rave and howl at the sight of blood are comparatively few in number, but they are so noisy that one not in a position to observe closely the behavior of the spectators might get the impression that the yelling for slaughter is unanimous.

In every prize fight crowd there is a proportion of low-browed, ravening, anthropoid brutes, who make intolerable nuisances of themselves to all human beings in their neighborhood. These hideous creatures are always present, and it is a reproach to the management of boxing affairs in Los Angeles that no effort is made to repress their outbreaks of bestiality. Always there are policemen scattered about the hall, but never do they attempt to preserve order, even though the yelling brutes interfere with the exhibition, howl at the referee and insult any one who tries to make an announcement from the stage. It would be a simple matter for the police to keep these hoodlums quiet, for they are as cowardly as they are vicious.

I know whereof I speak, for I am usually "among those present" at fistic functions, and invariably have I noted that most of the men around me want to see skillful boxing and are displeased by rough slugging and bloody battering. When Abdo, the Turk, was being drubbed by O'Brien, the majority of spectators in my vicinity were urging the referee to stop the affair and take the Turk out of the ring, but two or three brazen-throated gorillas just behind us were drowning all such advice with their yells of "Kill him! Put him out! Knock his head off!"

When old John Brink acted as mayor-domo of the fighting game in this city, there were no such scenes. Brink's method of preserving decent order was quite simple. He announced that if the crowd became noisy or yelled advice to fighters or referee, he would stop the performance. Then, if a hoodlum broke loose, the spectators would demand that the disturber be put out of the hall. There is a tip for Tom McCarey.

Heaven Forbid!

The theory of an amiable he-advocate of woman suffrage in Massachusetts that the cruelties and ferocities of civilization would be abolished by the so-called gentle sex, if they had control of the government, may be all right, but it has no basis of history or observed facts. The most implacable clamorers for bloody vengeance upon wrongdoers are the ladies, God bless 'em.

The most fiendishly cruel savage is the female of the species, as every man who has seen the hideous work of the Apache well knows. The most ferocious troops ever seen in battle were the women warriors of Dahomey. But those females are mere savages, and civilized women must not be compared to them? Um! Perhaps not. But the woman who bedecks herself with feathers and gewgaws is not so far from her barbarian prototype as she fondly imagines, and as man flatteringly tells her she is.

And I am prepared to lay a wager that many a woman would be pleased to see me boiled in oil for saying these things.

From battle, murder and government by the unfair sex, good Lord, preserve us!

Roosevelt's Reading and the Giant Gargantua.

The giant Gargantua, whose adventures are recorded by Rabelais, urged his elephantine son, Pantagruel, to study. "Let me see thee," he said, "an abyss and bottomless pit of knowledge." Pantagruel followed his father's advice, and, according to Rabelais, "the vivacity of his spirit amidst the books was like a great fire amongst dry wood, so active it was, vigorous and indefatigable."

In the amount of reading that he does, President Roosevelt should be classed with giants, according to a description and interpretation of the President in the March American Magazines.

"As with men so with books. President Roosevelt doesn't read them, he disembowels them. It is amazing to any one who loafs through a book as I do, taking it as an anodyne, at worst, or an opiate at best, using it to quiet an aching heart or stimulate my halting dreams, to think of the number of books the President reads in the midst of an activity almost without parallel in history.

"When does he read them? How does he remember them? That he both reads and remembers a mass of reading that would challenge Macaulay's record in point of quantity if not of quality is the general proud testimony of his intimate friends. It is not surprising to know that he is acquainted with the sagas of Ireland. It would be surprising to know that he isn't."

SPRINGTIME FOR THEE.

The charm of things beloved will never pass away—
So love the simple, friendly things that greet thee every day:

The shadows of the branches, a-tremble o'er the ground;
The tiny broken melody of grasses they have found;

The scent of springtime, breathing from bud and blade and bough—
Ah—let the sweetness of it all possess thy being now!

The ripple, down arroyos, of waters in the sun,
The flushing of gray sycamores whose leafage is begun;

A bird-song in the morning—gay as the rosy cloud—
Invite thy soul of silence to sing with joys avowed;

The coming of the lillies, the time of violets,
Call unto quickened beating the heart from old regrets.

Then look with eyes of loving on all the gracious things
That every step in Nature's world within thy vision brings.

Thus in the happy seasons behold thy heart's delight
And know that thou art living, the morning and the night.

WHAT'S SAID IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 22.—It has been some time since George Washington lived, thrived and saved his country, and the older ones admit that he was a very good man in his way; but the younger generation growing up here know little of him and are much better posted on Thaw, Delmas, Heney, Abe Ruef, Schmitz, and the Big Stick. Now that our worthy Mayor and the school directors have dined with the Vice-President of the United States, Society Leader Greenway has them on his list, and the alleged player of bassons may cut a pigeon's wing in the next society cotillion. Tanglefoot McGovern of Fillmore street denies that director Altmann tried to sell Fairbanks a black and white sketch of Phelan or that Director Boyle asked him to subscribe to the Bulletin.

Thrice did Abe Ruef plead not guilty to the charge of extorting money from French restaurant men, and the decks are almost cleared for an action long deferred but quite inevitable. Frank Heney has no intention of accepting offers to prosecute grafters in San José and Nevada and will have it out to a finish with Lawyers Ach and Shortridge, if it takes all summer. Simultaneous with the beginning of the end of the little boss the citizens are going to clean up the town and the week's auto show will go down in history as a big advertising success.

CARVING A CAREER.

Young Los Angeles Girl Making a Fine Start in the Dramatics of the City.

Miss Virginia Berry, a young Los Angeles girl barely 16 years of age, is already carving for herself a niche in the dramatics of the city.

This week Miss Berry is to appear at the Auditorium with Florence Stone and Dick Ferris in "La Tosca." She is to take the part of Gemirino, a young boy. She has taken a number of such parts before, and is particularly fetching and capable. Miss Berry has had no dramatic school training to speak of, but has started out from the school to the professional life with scarce a break, and all the experienced actors are pleased with her talent and dainty and graceful stage presence. She is a niece of Mrs. E. K. Foster.

Tucson the First American City.

An old, old vellum document bearing the signatures of their Catholic Majesties Ferdinand and Isabella, and countersigned by the Viceroy of Mexico and Gen. Coronado, has been discovered recently. This document proves to historians that St. Augustine was not the first permanent city in the United States, but that Tucson, Ariz., has that distinction, having been founded in 1552. It seems that Tucson was a pueblo of some size when the first pillar in the old stockade was set in the soil at St. Augustine.

Mrs. Cora B. Miller Makes a Fortune

Started a Few Years Ago with No Capital, and Now Employs Nearly One Hundred Clerks and Stenographers

Until a few years ago Mrs. Cora B. Miller lived in a manner similar to that of thousands of other very poor women of the average small town and village. She now resides in her own palatial brownstone residence, and is considered one of the most successful business women in the United States.

Mrs. Miller's New Residence. Earned in Less Than One Year.

Several years ago Mrs. Miller learned of a mild and simple preparation that cured herself and several friends of female weakness and piles. She was besieged by so many women needing treatment that she decided to furnish it to those who might call for it. She started with only a few dollars' capital, and its remedy, possessing true and wonderful merit, producing many cures when doctors and other remedies failed, the demand grew so rapidly she was several times compelled to seek larger quarters. She now occupies one of the city's largest office buildings, which she owns, and almost one hundred clerks and stenographers are required to assist in this great business.

MILLION WOMEN USE IT.

More than a million women have used Mrs. Miller's remedy, and no matter where you live, she can refer you to ladies in your own locality who can and will tell any sufferer that this marvelous remedy really cures women. Despite the fact that Mrs. Miller's business is very extensive, she is always willing to give aid and advice to every suffering woman who writes to her. She is a generous, good woman and has decided to give away to women who have never used her medicine $10,000 worth absolutely FREE.

Every woman suffering with pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing-down feelings, nervousness, creeping sensations up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, or piles from any cause, should sit right down and send her name and address to Mrs. Cora B. Miller, Box 820, Kokomo, Ind., and receive by mail (free of charge in plain wrapper) a 50-cent box of her marvelous medicine; also her valuable book, which every woman should have.

Remember, this offer will not last long, for thousands and thousands of women who are suffering will take advantage of this generous means of getting cured. So if you are ailing do not suffer another day, but send your name and address to Mrs. Miller for the book and medicine before the $10,000 worth is all gone.

OLD TEETH OR BRIDGE WORK

This method does away with plates, and while more expensive is certainly much more satisfactory. You can bite and masticate with these teeth just as you could with natural teeth. We do so much of this work and save more time by the Schiffman Method that we are enabled to save you about 25 per cent. In delicate work like this, where practice is such an element in success, does it not seem reasonable to suppose that a dentist of natural ability, wide experience and unusual practice, can do better work and cheaper than others of less experience and small practice, even if they have the same natural ability? Reason answers for us.

It is with pleasure that I state that I have had several teeth filled by Dr. Schiffman, and that he removed the nerve and filled the root of one of my teeth, and put on a porcelain crown which cannot be distinguished from a natural tooth, all of which was done without pain. JUDSON R. RUSH, of Davis & Rush, Attorneys, 217 New High street.

I have had porcelain crown work and some filling done, and also had ten teeth and roots extracted by Dr. Schiffman, and take great pleasure in recommending his method to any one wishing dental work done without pain.
MRS. C. W. F. SCHRAMM,
Mother of Paloma, Schramm, corner of Austin and Wadsworth.

I had my upper and lower teeth extracted by Dr. Schiffman without any pain. I have since had an upper and lower set made and they fit fine. They fit so tight that it is with difficulty that I can remove them. I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Schiffman and his work, and advise every one needing work done to patronize him.
MRS. F. J. KELLOGG,
146 West 14th St.

Dr. Schiffman has done bridge work and made crowns and extracted teeth for me and without any pain, and in the very best manner. I am pleased to recommend him.
C. H. PENROSE,
235 South Main St.

Dr. Schiffman has done a large amount of bridge and plate work for me, which was done in a very satisfactory manner.
A. J. BRADISH,
Chief of L. A. Detectives.

I have had a number of teeth extracted and filled, and a six-tooth bridge made by the Schiffman Dental Co., and find the work very satisfactory, and was perfectly painless.
IRA L. HAAS, Riverside, Cal.

I had thirteen sore teeth extracted by Dr. Schiffman. I dreaded before he began, but it didn't hurt me one bit.
A. T. ROBINSON,
"Sandab Jack," Avalon, Catalina.

Dr. Schiffman has extracted ten teeth for me, and I never felt the least annoyance. The operation was absolutely painless. He has made me a set of teeth that are highly satisfactory. They fit perfectly and feel fine.

I cheerfully recommend the doctor as a conscientious, efficient, painstaking dentist to any and all that require his services.
MRS. W. L. EWING,
1145 East 35th St.

Dr. Schiffman extracted eight teeth for me without a particle of pain, and afterwards made me a full upper flexible plate which fits me perfectly.

I have given them a good test, as it has been a year and a half since they were made. I gladly recommend the doctor to all who are in need of dental services.
MRS. EMMA BIRKLE,
420 South Molino Ave.

I am pleased to state that Dr. Schiffman fitted me with both upper and lower bridge work, which I have worn for over a year with perfect ease and satisfaction.
MRS. CHAS. E. PACKMAN, 1215 Berendo Street.

On account of some unfortunate experience I had in the extraction of my teeth, I became a great coward in this respect. Today Dr. Schiffman extracted one of my very refractory teeth without causing me one particle of pain.

PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

The City Attorney will recommend to the Council Monday the repeal of the ordinance setting a date for an election to decide whether Los Angeles and San Pedro may consolidate. He says the State law is insufficient to permit consolidation.

City Auditor Mushet is striving to nail the lumber trust; he finds it is impossible to get competitive bids for city supplies.

Non-Partisan members of the Council are resisting the attempt of the administration to remove laborers in the parks from civil service.

The police commissioners have been indulging in slumming expeditions to determine whether vice is protected on Commercial street.

A wrangle between Attorney J. C. Calhain and Herbert T. Morrow in Justice Pierce's court yesterday was followed by fisticuffs in the clerk's office.

William J. McKinley is held for trial in the Superior Court. C. B. William, the elusive witness who is thought to know something about the shooting of William Reid, is still missing.

Prof. Walter J. Bailey and Capt. George O. Lockwod, of the Los Angeles Military Academy were in Justice Chamber's court yesterday, charged with brutally beating a former pupil, Leon K. Gibson. The case was continued to Friday at 2 o'clock.

Thomas J. Stroud, who is alleged to have fired a bullet into Joseph Shine which caused the latter's death, was charged with murder yesterday in the Police Court..

Mrs. Olive Kuhn pleaded guilty to stealing two silk waists from Mrs. Fannie Bartee and was fined $40 by Justice Frederickson. Her father paid the fine.

AT THE CITY HALL.

CONSOLIDATION ELECTION OFF.

ATTORNEY RECOMMENDS REPEAL OF ORDINANCE.

State Law Insufficient to Permit Los Angeles and San Pedro to Unite Governments, Says Mr. Hewitt. Council May Act Monday—Machine Politicians Now Count the Cost.

The City Attorney will recommend to the Council Monday the repeal of the ordinance calling for a special election to permit the consolidation of Los Angeles and San Pedro.

The ordinance provides that the consolidation election shall be held on March 14. At the time it was passed by the Council the Consolidation Commission hoped to secure the passage of their consolidation amendment by the State Legislature. When the political freebooters at Sacramento knifed this amendment the Consolidation Commission recommended that the election be not held.

"I am convinced that it would be a grave mistake to attempt to hold the election under the present State law," said Mr. Hewitt yesterday afternoon, "the consensus of opinions of leading attorneys is that the law is not sufficient. To hold an election under such circumstances would only mean to open the way for tedious court litigation that might impair the city's credit.

"If there are any who think that the State law is sufficient they have their recourse in mandamus proceedings against the Council. We would welcome such proceedings as they would settle the vexed question of the validity of the statute."

This action will be taken with reluctance by Mayor and Council. At the City Hall there is not one voice against consolidation. Eighteen precincts in the city voted to elect Senator Savage. Not one of the 8000 voters in these precincts has raised his voice in favor of the attitude maintained by Savage at Sacramento.

He is not blamed wholly for defeating the bill, the City Hall considers that he was simply voting a marked ballot. There were other men in the State Senate, a score of them, who would have taken orders just as Savage did. His selection in this instance is taken by the inner ring at the City Hall as an announcement of his retirement from State politics.

Mayor Harper has hoped all along that something would turn up making consolidation possible. But he admits that he must yield to the opinion of the attorneys on the legal status of the case.

"If it were possible for Los Angeles and San Pedro to consolidate under the present statute," said a city official yesterday, "that statute would be repealed next week. The machine politicians at Sacramento are in control of the Legislature and they are not going to take any chances on this consolidation. I expect to see the old statute repealed before the Legislature adjourns."

Last Monday night the Consolidation Commission recommended that all attempt to consolidate with San Pedro at the present time be abandoned. This action was taken at the advice of the law committee which held that the Supreme Court would rule that the election was not legal.

During the last week the forces behind Savage at San Pedro have made a few demonstrations. It now develops that the saloon men were fighting consolidation because they feared that something might be done by the new city to break the liquor monopoly at the seashore. Officeholders at San Pedro were also giving Savage aid and comfort secretly. These realized that to consolidate might affect their tenure of office.

Policemen and firemen at San Pedro opposed consolidation for the reason that it would bring them in competition with civil service. These interests are the only ones that have taken part in a campaign against consolidation. Citizens at San Pedro who are in favor of the project are very likely to have an accounting with the politicians at San Pedro at the next election.

NAILS LUMBER TRUST.

NO COMPETITIVE BIDS.

City Auditor Mushet has declared war on the lumber trust. He has discovered that bids for supplying material for the outfall sewer and the Board of Public Works are all at the same figure. Yesterday he called the attention of the Finance Committee to demands for $3000 in lumber, divided into small lots, so that each was for less than $500.

Engineer Tuttle said that it was not possible to get competitive bids, that there is no competition. He scoured the city for a lumber company that would cut the trust price, but found none. Chairman Wallace of the Finance Committee suggested that the committee take the question under advisement. This brought a gentle reminder from the Board of Public Works that the Council has no jurisdiction over purchases made by the board from bond money. Under the new charter amendment there is no appeal from the action of the commissioners of the Department of Public Works.

Auditor Mushet and the board will make further investigations. They hope to find a vulnerable point in the trust's armor.

COUNCIL NOT WILLING.

POLITICS VS. CIVIL SERVICE.

The park department has encountered unexpected opposition to its programme for taking the park laborers out of civil service. The Non-Partisan members of the Council are openly opposed to the plan, and it is necessary for an enabling resolution to pass the Council before politics can enter the parks.

The special meeting of the Civil Service Board called for yesterday failed to materialize. The Civil Service Commissioners do not care to be placed on the gridiron by passing a resolution abolishing civil service in the parks until they are certain that the Council will pass a similar resolution.

A new charter amendment provides that the laborers in any department may be removed from civil service by concurrent resolutions passed by the department, the Civil Service Board and the Council. This amendment was expected to apply only to construction work where many men are employed on short notice. The first application for placing it in force comes from the park department, where there are comparatively few changes in the personnel of the force.

Inspector Porter of the Fire Underwriters' Association made a final appeal to the administration at the City Hall yesterday for fire bonds. He told the members of the Finance Committee that he must make his report to the fire insurance companies at once, and that this report will be influenced by the expression of the Council on fire protection.

Acting on his recommendation, the Finance Committee voted to request the water department to increase the size of the hydrants in the business district from two and one-half to four inches. The committee will also recommend to the Council that 120 new hydrants be placed in the downtown district. The estimated cost of these improvements is $20,000. Half will be taken from the tax fund and half from the water revenue fund.

Two first-class engines are to be ordered at once for emergency protection in the business district. They will cost about $13,000.

After a long discussion, the Finance Committee voted to recommend to the Council that an election to issue fire bonds be held soon after the Owens River bond election. The recommendation says "not later than August."

Inspector Porter says that he thinks the action of the Council will be accepted by the fire insurance companies as an earnest of good faith and that there will be no disturbance of present insurance rates; but the question of rates, he says, is wholly outside his jurisdiction.

"The fire insurance people have no desire to do aught that would imperil the water bonds," said Mr. Porter. "We realize that all these precautions are useless without water. If you should have a dry winter the water question would become acute. We regard Superintendent Mulholland as a resourceful man, and think he would be able to pull you through, but you are likely to have some close calls for water during the next four years."

INSPECT RED LIGHTS.

OFFICIALS GO SLUMMING.

Mayor Harper and the members of the Police Commission have taken to slumming to determine first hand whether vice is protected on Commercial street. Complaint has come to the commission that houses of ill fame are running in flagrant violation of city ordinances and State laws, and that they are protected in their vice by the police department.

Friday the commissioners visited four houses of ill repute on the street. Yesterday afternoon they held an executive conference to discuss the situation. For four years Commercial street has been recognized as the center of the "tenderloin." Merchants and land owners on the street have petitioned the commission to drive the disreputable characters from the cheap lodging-houses there and win the street back to respectability.

Says Rates Are Low.

The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company made formal protest to the Council yesterday against the refusal of the City Attorney to accept the company's annual statement of revenue, expenditure and assets. The Attorney sent to the company for a more definite statement. The company replies that the telephone rates in Los Angeles are lower than those of any other city of our population, generally speaking, in the country; and adds that it would be practically impossible to furnish all the data asked for.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

TWO ATTORNEYS "MIX THINGS."

DISAGREEMENT IN COURT ENDS IN FIGHT OUTSIDE.

In Contempt Proceedings Before Justice Pierce Calhain Accuses Morrow of Fraud—Later, in Clerk's Office, They Reach for Each Other With Fine Disregard for Ringside Rules.

Attorney J. C. Calhain got angry again yesterday morning in Justice Pierce's court, and Attorney Herbert T. Morrow obliged him with the trouble he seemed to be looking for. The bout, which took place in the clerk's office, was fast but brief, and several features, which are frowned upon in a roped arena, were introduced.

The disagreement began in the course of the contempt proceedings against C. H. Stewart. An attachment had been issued for Mr. Stewart through the agency of Attorney Morrow. In open court Calhain accused his colleague of procuring the attachment by deliberate fraud. At this point Justice Pierce interposed with a suggestion that Mr. Calhain should conduct himself less explosively. Calhain bowed to the decree, growling that he would settle it outside.

Mr. Calhain is a good sized man, and of Irish descent. Mr. Morrow is somewhat smaller. No sooner had the two attorneys passed beyond the sacred precincts of the court, than Mr. Morrow proceeded to resent the charge Calhain had hurled at him, at first with mere words, but presently with a whack with the flat of his hand.

Whurroo! The Irishman was willing. The disputants mixed things for a moment, and it was seen that Mr. Morrow showed a correct appreciation of the sensitiveness of the human skin, for he was lashing out with his feet at that portion of Calhain's anatomy. Calhain appeared to be reaching for his antagonist's hair.

Before the interest or enthusiasm of either combatant had begun to wane, they were parted.

Calhain, some tige ago, was sternly rebuked by Justice Pierce for lack of etiquette.

M'KINLEY BOUND OVER.

IMPORTANT WITNESS MISSING.

Without further examination, and in the absence of a witness who has been searched for in vain for several days, William J. McKinley yesterday was held for trial in the Superior Court on the charge of attempting to murder his uncle, William Reid, on December 16, 1906. Bail was fixed by Justice Pierce at $10,000.

The missing witness, C. B. Williams, who appears to be wilfully eluding the officers who are seeking to serve a subpoena on him, is expected to prove an important witness for the prosecution of McKinley. It is believed in the District Attorney's office that McKinley was sent to his uncle's place, beyond Boyle Heights, on the occasion when the shooting is alleged to have taken place, by Williams. Williams and McKinley drove out to the ranch together the day after the old man was shot.

CHARGES FRAUD.

AGAINST TRUSTED FRIEND.

Consipracy to defraud is charged in a complaint filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday. The suit is brought by Henry Siskin to recover $1400 declared to have been obtained from him by trickery, in which his most trusted friend is involved.

Siskin was the owner of two city lots in April, 1904. According to the complaint his friend, Harry Berk, came to him at that time and told him of an opportunity to purchase some land covered with wood, which was especially valuable for the manufacture of excelsior.

Berk offered to pay the entire purchase price, $8000, and give Siskin a half interest in the property on condition of the latter giving a mortgage of $4000 on his lots, it is averred. This, it appears, was done.

The mortgage was transferred to a supposed "innocent party," Oscar Epstein, whom the complaint declares to be a party to the alleged conspiracy. Siskin was induced to pay $4000 for the return of his note, it is stated.

ALIMONY NOT PAID.

CHAUFFEUR IS JAILED.

Because he failed to pay alimony to his former wife for the support of three children, A. W. Johnson, a chauffeur, was committed to the County Jail yesterday, being guilty of contempt of court.

Judge Hutton ordered the man to pay $50 on account or go to jail. He professed inability to pay and was locked up. He is said to have property.

Mrs. Johnson obtained a decree on December 21 of last year, with an allowance of $12 a week. So far Johnson has paid only $10. His excuse was that, because of rainy weather, he had not been able to make much by renting his automobile.

Twice Retired from Navy.

To be twice honorably retired from the country's service, either naval or military, comes to few men.

"Capt." George C. Boerum, who celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday at Melrose only a few days ago, has had the distinction of being twice honorably retired from the navy, and even now he declares that he will not accept the verdict, but that as soon as he is able he will return to his work at the navy yard. "They want me to retire," says the captain, "but I'll be darned if I do."—[Boston Herald.

Thousands of Tons of Copper Wire

Not less than 370,000,000 pounds of copper wire were in use on the numerous telephone lines of the Bell companies in America last year. This year there is expected an increase of 53,000,000 pounds. In addition to wire, considerable quantities of copper are used in the manufacture of brass for telephone instruments and for alloys required in other branches of telephone service.

MILITARY ACADEMY OFFICERS DENY BRUTALITY.

Prof. Bailey and Capt. Lockwood of Los Angeles School on Trial in Police Court—Young Wife Fined for Stealing Waists—Stroud Formally Charged With Shine's Murder.

After many postponements the trial of Capt. George O. Lockwood and Prof. Walter J. Bailey of the Los Angeles Military Academy, who are charged with brutally beating a former pupil, Leon K. Gibson, was called yesterday morning in Justice Chambers's court. All the morning session was occupied with the taking of testimony and then the case was continued until Friday at 2 o'clock.

Some of the testimony was sensational. The system of correcting an unruly pupil by knocking his feet out from under him and then gently trouncing the prostrate victim with a cat-o-nine-tails is said to be in vogue at the West End academy. Photographs, which show cruel welts on the back and legs of young Gibson, were introduced.

Attorney Powers, for the prosecution, showed a desire to make public everything possible concerning the conduct of the school principal and his teachers. Earl Rogers represents the school authorities.

"Mr. Bailey came up behind me and knocked my feet from under me," testified young Gibson, "and then Capt. Lockwood jumped on my chest and hit me in the mouth with his fist. They gave me about sixty licks with a strap, in which a notch had been cut. They applied it with all their strength."

On cross-examination by Earl Rogers the young man admitted that he had gone first to have his wounds photographed and had later consulted a physician. He admitted having been unruly at times and said that the "physical punishment" was once administered.

Mrs. E. E. Shafer of No. 1310 Mohawk street, the boy's aunt, testified that Prof. Bailey had promised never to whip Gibson. She said she had asked the school authorities to allow her charge to come home while she was ill and that the request had been denied.

Mrs. Agnes Warner of No. 1306 Mohawk street said that she had seen the welts on young Gibson and that she had taken her son away from the school because of the punishment administered to the other boy.

The defense will try to show that Gibson attempted to destroy all forms of discipline in the school. The charge that Capt. Lockwood struck the boy in the mouth will be denied. It will be shown that during the three or four months that Gibson was in school, he received many demerit marks and was often complained against by his teachers. The defense alleges that Gibson resisted when he was punished.

Girl Wiser Now.

Mrs. Olive Kuhn, who is accused of stealing two silk shirt waists from Mrs. Fannie Bartee pleaded guilty to a charge of petit larceny yesterday morning in Justice Frederickson's court. She is only 18 years old, and told a pathetic story.

She said she had spent much time at the local skating rinks, although her husband objected to her doing so.

As an excuse for stealing the waists the young woman declared that she had lost all her effects in San José at the time of the earthquake and since then had been able to secure only a few clothes. She saw two waists at the home of Mrs. Bartee and thought the latter would not miss them.

Justice Frederickson explained to the fair prisoner that a second like offense would probably mean the penitentiary. Then he sentenced her to a fine of $40 or forty days in the City Jail. The father of Mrs. Kuhn, who came from Elsinore yesterday to attend the trial, paid the fine.

Charged With Murder.

Thomas J. Stroud was formally charged with murder yesterday morning in Justice Frederickson's court. He will be examined on Wednesday at 2 o'clock. The nervous strain, attendant upon his imprisonment and approaching trial, is telling upon him.

On last Sunday morning, during the altercation with Joseph Shine on the East First street viaduct, Stroud is alleged to have fired a bullet into Shine which caused the death of the latter.

Stroud's wife is in a delicate condition. He has begged to be allowed to see her but bail has not been allowed and he is forced to remain in jail.

Many of the man's friends have called at the jail since his arrest and have offered assistance.

Caresses With Brick.

Petro Fravaso was sentenced to fifteen days in the City Jail for caressing Ustacio Jaurez with a brick. The incident occurred at the home of Jaurez during a friendly drinking bout.

Japanese Heavily Fined.

S. Oto, who was accused of conducting a blind pig, was found guilty yesterday morning by Justice Frederickson and sentenced to a fine of $75. The Japanese promptly paid the fine and was released. Mrs. J. Kaskebe, who was charged with the same offense, was discharged.

Why Honey Cells Are Hexagonal.

Honey bees are generally credited with instinctive skill in making the cells of the comb hexagonal in shape, but it is probable that this construction is merely the ordinary result of mechanical laws. Solitary bees always make circular cells, and the bees in a hive no doubt make them circular also, but mechanical pressure forces them into a hexagonal form. A well-known naturalist, in speaking of the matter, says that all cylinders made of soft, pliable substances become hexagonal under such circumstances.

Also in the recent case of Kidd vs. Pearson: "A State has the right to prohibit or restrict the manufacture of intoxicating liquors within her limits; to prohibit all sale or traffic in them within said State, and to provide regulations for the abatement as a common nuisance of the property used for such forbidden purposes."

ONLY WAITING.

With this apparently clear case made out against the saloon business of the United States the local temperance folk are only waiting patiently until the ponderous machinery of the law shall grind out their expected decision that there shall be no more legalized saloons in the United States, and then, the temperance organizations declare, they will see that it is enforced.

A decision by the Supreme Court would at once outlaw every saloon in the United States. It would not necessarily abolish the saloon, but would make it impossible for it to exist in any community where any law exists and is recognized.

CASTING OUT DEVILS.

A Pennsylvania Child Dies Because Its Mother Tried to Cure It With Sorcery.

A peculiar story comes from Washington, Pa., of the death of a child because the mother had more faith in sorcery than she did in the doctor's medicine.

According to the story, Mrs. Sebastian Yares believed her 3-year-old daughter possessed of a devil, and the child died while the mother was resorting to incantations to cast out the evil one.

It is alleged that while the child was dying the mother was in an outbuilding pouring melted candle grease through her wedding ring to bring before her the face of the witch which she considered responsible for the trouble in her family.

When the child became ill a physician was called and left medicine, instructing the mother how to use it. The woman is reported to have thrown the medicine out and announced she would use her own means to cure the child.

She first cut off a portion of her own hair, it is asserted, shingled the heads of her husband and the child, and then mixed the hair together, covering it with dough. This she rolled into a ball, and, after throwing it over the top of the house, took it to the nearest crossroads and buried it, believing the first person to pass would become possessed of the evil spirit that affected her child.

When this failed, it is said, the mother resorted to the wedding ring and candle grease.

Stockholders, Yet Prosecutors.

While Wall street is trying to work itself into ecstasy over its alleged sensational discovery that President Roosevelt is the owner of $10,000 6 per cent. bonds of the Dakota extension of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad, it has entirely overlooked an announcement made by Justice Moody on January 21 from the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States that as the owner of Union Pacific bonds he could not sit during the consideration of two railroad cases in which that corporation was concerned. Mr. Moody's announcement caused surprise because of the great activity he showed while Attorney-General in prosecuting investigations in which the Union Pacific was involved.—[Chicago Record-Herald.

"The tract comprises what is virtually the last of the high ground in the southwest, and commands a superb panoramic view of the ocean and Catalina around to the highest peaks of the the Sierra Madre range. The Bauer holding has been long sought by subdividers."

RIDGEWOOD PARK

A Handsome, Spacious Private Residence Park, Beautifully Located In The

WILSHIRE BOULEVARD DISTRICT

On elevated ground, with a most pleasing view of the mountains and the city. The smallest residence site in Ridgewood Park is 60x170, many range from 70x170 to 200x170, and fifteen sites contain two acres each.

The protection to home builders is carefully arranged, so that in different sections of the Park, houses will cost at least $4000, $5000, and, on the 2-acre lots, at least $15,000. All streets will have petrolithic pavement, most satisfactory known for residence districts.

Several prominent citizens have already secured residence sites in Ridgewood Park, on which homes costing from $10,000 to $25,000 will soon be erected.

The West Sixth Street car line, now being built, will run along the entire south line of Ridgewood Park, on West Fourth Street.

At present we are authorized to offer only a few building sites, but these are in one of the finest parts of Ridgewood Park and can be had at prices below those of surrounding property.

The location, natural advantages and expensive improvements are such that home-builders looking for sites in the Wilshire district, and investors, have in Ridgewood Park a notable opportunity to secure property with an absolutely assured future.

To see Ridgewood Park, telephone us for an automobile appointment. Call on us for interesting particulars.

MINERS UNDER SECRET ARMS.

Thirty-seven Private Companies Reported.

Army Officers See Danger in These Organizations.

Said to Be Secretly Armed and Drilled.

A Washington dispatch says Capt. Henry H. Whitney of the Coast Artillery, who was one of the regular army inspectors sent into Pennsylvania to inspect National Guard organizations last year, has made a report to the War Department which substantiates the charge that union labor men in certain districts of the State, notably mine workers, have organized independent military companies which are secretly armed and drilled, and whose purpose is evidently to oppose the National Guard regiments in case of strike or other labor troubles.

This is the old charge that has been made by the mine operators and their friends every time the National Guard has been called out for strike duty, but never has it received any general credence and never has it had such official support as the report of Capt. Whitney gives it.

Capt. Whitney declares specifically that there are at least thirty-seven of these independent organizations and that they are animated by "intense antagonism" to the National Guard. It is plain that he believes these labor union soldiers may ultimately make war upon the State militia.

The language of his report has startled military circles here and further investigation will be made. Capt. Whitney says:

"The Ninth Infantry and the Thirteenth Infantry, Pennsylvania National Guard, located in the very home of unionism, are confronted by the intense antagonism of mine labor organizations, as well as of independent military and so-called patriotic organizations, there now being some thirty-seven of these companies in the Scranton-Wilkesbarre district. I am informed that these companies are wearing a uniform like that of the regular army, that they are gradually and quietly acquiring arms, and that their active hostility to the National Guard constitutes a serious menace to State authority and to law and order."

This sensational comment appears among other criticisms of the National Guard of the State in the report of the military secretary of the army relative to State troops of the country. Capt. Whitney was one of three regular army officers who inspected the Pennsylvania Guard, and the territory assigned to him included the great mining region. Here is the scene of the coal strikes. Fierce battles have raged in time of labor troubles between miners, State constabulary, police and militia.

Will the next coal strike mean civil war with organized labor, uniformed and armed, arrayed against the military arm of State and national government? This is the question running through the War Department since Capt. Whitney revealed the militant activity among Pennsylvania's miners.

BEATEN, MAY DIE.

James Wright, colored, was found in a tent at the grading camp at First and Rampart streets yesterday morning, unconscious. He had been brutally beaten, his face and body being a mass of bruises, and he had sustained concussion of the brain. He was taken to the Receiving Hospital and is still in a state of coma. He may die. The police are looking for a man named Brown, who is said to be Wright's assailant.

HER RONANCE TRAGIC.

pitied himself. She must get a divorce.

Never! Never would she assist in this tragedy of her love. Let it die, if need be, she would not hasten its execution. That night he left her home forever.

In the days that followed Mrs. Tomlinson told her husband that if he stayed in Chicago with that other woman she would have him arrested. Miss Irwin left the city and came West. She came to Pasadena with letters of introduction from Tomlinson.

Society received her with open arms as a friend of its friends. There was no suspicion that Miss Irwin was not a friend of Mrs. Tomlinson and she was made much of, for she was beautiful. Then one day Mr. Tomlinson came—alone. Friends wondered. The shock followed.

The couple left Pasadena together. A week was spent at Coronado Beach. Two weeks were spent at the Grand Cañon. What was the world to them! potent love dominated their days. Sympathizing friends took care that Mrs. Tomlinson knew it all.

DIVORCE THEN WEDDING.

A change came over her spirit. Facts, however ugly, must be met bravely. She determined to get a divorce. Suit was filed in the Chicago court upon statutory grounds. It was not defended. This was in December, and judgment quickly followed. Mrs. Tomlinson was awarded $3500. Her husband had already given her all the furniture and personal property.

Hardly was the ink dry upon the judgment roll when Tomlinson hastened to join Miss Irwin in Nevada. A few days later they were married and took up their home and new life in Goldfield, where Tomlinson opened a broker"s office. He did not hire a stenographer.

Recently friends in this city have heard that Tomlinson has left Goldfield and settled in San Francisco, where he has opened another office as a broker in mining stocks.

But back in Chicago is a lonely little woman who does not care to think. Unto herself she is seeking to be sufficient. But to a woman who has for a lifetime devoted herself to another, this is heart-rending.

Now her eyes are turned again to the Southland, where still the flowers bloom as of yore, where her friends are, as ever, ready with a warm welcome. She wants to come, but still she dreads the pain of recollection, of the paths where formerly two walked side by side.

DRINKS POISON BY MISTAKE.

Emmette Erstline, a painter, living at No. 3121 Winter street, narrowly escaped death by poisoning yesterday afternoon. The young man entered the Fort Costa Milling Company's offices soon after dinner. He wanted a drink and a laborer indicated a pitcher which was supposed to contain water. Erstline drank deeply. The pitcher contained formaldehyde. The victim was hurried to the Receiving Hospital, where the poisonous draught was pumped out of his stomach.

The smallest shoe in the collection is that of Josephine Cohan, a dainty dancing shoe of black kid, a full half inch smaller than a shoe worn by one of the smallest of the Lilliputians' company. There are steam-stained slippers from serpentine dancers, such as Papinta, side by side with the dainty French creations of Fougere, the straw sandals of Ten Ichi, the magician, and a cloth of gold slipper worn by Elsie de Wolfe. Ada Lewis's slipper is as tough in looks as the parts she used to play. A slipper from one of the mid-West "honka-tonks" hangs beside a dainty pair worn by one of the genuine original Florodora sextet girls, while "Silvers" Oakey's clumsy clog hangs between a blue-beaded moccasin worn by Sitting Bull and a quill-decorated affair worn by one of the Mesdames Sitting Bull.

A cabinet in one corner was used in one of the productions of the old Lyceum Theater, and scarcely suggests its picture-frame moulding and stamped paper origin, while a glazed cabinet contains a heterogeneous collection, ranging from an inkstand owned by Gen. Santa Ana, the Mexican patriot, and pass-out checks to Ford's Theater used the night of Lincoln's assassination, to dressed fleas from New Orleans, and a Turk's head made by Golden, the magician, out of a napkin cleverly folded. A two-quart candy jar is very nearly full of seat coupons, telling of shows good and bad.

All told, the collection consists of more than 2000 souvenirs, and the history of most of them can be readily recalled by the owner.

A violent shock of earthquake occurred at Kingston, Jamaica, Friday, which caused quite a scare. It was the heaviest shock since January 14. No loss of life occurred, but several of the damaged buildings collapsed.

Mining News---Review of the Week.

ARIZONA'S BIG MINES.

REVIVAL OF HARQUA HALA AND MAMMOTH CAMPS.

Lost Ore Veins Rediscovered and New Bodies of Gold and Copper Ore Opened—Smelter and Railroads Make Profitable Working Possible. Copper in Globe-Wheat Fields.

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Feb. 16.—A late visitor to Phoenix was Frank Hatch, now a New York hotel man, but for years a resident of this city. While an Arizonan he came into possession of a block of $500 shares of the United Verde Mining Company's stock, foisted upon him as security for an unpaid loan of $500. He held the stock for years. In New York he heard that W. A. Clark of Montana was buying United Verde stock. Hatch considered himself little better than a bunco expert when he succeeded in unloading his stock on Clark at a dollar a share. Today that same stock is returning dividends of about $100,000 a year.

Years ago the Mammoth mine at Goldfields, forty miles east of Phoenix, was accounted one of the richest gold producers of the Territory. Just what it did produce is not known, but it is told that it returned a profit of $500,000 to its owners, Hall and Sullivan of Denver. The main ore vein faulted and was lost, and for years only prospecting work has been done upon the property. Now it is known that the prospecting on the lower levels has given such encouragement that the present owner, C. L. Hall, is preparing to sink a shaft 1000 feet in depth, to strike the ore body far below the old workings. The surrounding hills are full of gold prospects, but little of value has been developed outside of the Mammoth claims.

HARQUA HALA MILL WORKING.

Twenty stamps have been started in the mill at Harqua Hala, northeastern Yuma county, on ores from the Harqua Hala mine. The operating company is building a tramway to the Golden Eagle claim, a mile distant, where a phenomenal strike of gold ore lately was made on the lower levels of the famous old property. With the tramway in operation, the other twenty stamps of the mill will be dropped and immense returns are expected. When the property was worked before, the nearest railway station was 100 miles away. Now the Arizona and California Railroad is to be reached only a few miles away, the reduction in transportation expense enabling the handling of large bodies in the Harqua Hala claims that could not have been touched, save at loss, in the old days.

Four hundred miners are working in and around the camp of Quartzsite, in northern Yuma county, where very rich returns in free gold are being found near the surface. One of the largest properties is that of C. A. Pease, who is working seventy-five men.

Plans are being made for the building of a smelter at the mine of the United States Copper Company, eighteen miles west of Wickenburg, and for the building of a road to connect the property with the Arizona and California Railroad at Eagle Eye station. Very extensive improvements at the mine will depend upon the development of water, and it is probable that it will become necessary to install a pumping plant six miles from the mine.

COPPER MONARCH.

Work is being pushed on the Copper Monarch mine in the Eagle Tail Mountains, about fifty miles west of Phoenix, a property owned by W. J. Bryant of Los Angeles. J. E. Chapton, in charge, states that he believes he has found the main mineral body, some distance from where former Los Angeles owners of the property sunk large sums a few years ago. He has opened up the ledge at varying depths for a distance of 1400 feet, the ore body showing a width of from five to sixteen feet, assays running from 6 to 12 per cent in copper and around $6 a ton in gold. Several ore shipments have given profitable returns. There are five mineral bodies on the property, all of them of apparent worth.

DESERT QUEEN.

Fifty miles from Vicksburg station on the Arizona and California Railroad, and seventeen miles southwest of Quartzsite, lies the property of the Desert Queen Mining Company, mainly embracing the Copper Bottom group. According to G. G. Goodwin of Dayton, O., the Copper Bottom is proving to be a real mine, after $113,000 has been expended upon it in useless work and for equipment. Fifteen hundred feet of tunneling was driven into a hillside without producing a pound of ore. Lately, however, a cross-cut tunnel has developed an ore body that samples in copper over 25 per cent., with seventy-four ounces in silver and about $30 in gold to the ton. The values are in narrow veins, in a easily-mined formation of schist and porphyry.

NATIVE COPPER.

Something of a camp has been established on Pinto Creek, northwest of Globe, among a score or more of promising copper properties. The new 100-ton concentrator of the Pinto Creek Mining and Smelting Company is running steadily on ore from the Yo Tambien mine. Important results are expected from work lately started on the prospects of the Calumet and Globe Company, a strong corporation with rich copper claims. Native copper has been found at twenty-five feet of depth in the shaft of the Globe-Hatfields Company, as well as a three-foot vein of brown copper oxide.

The Arizona Commercial Company, near Globe, is shipping two carloads of ore a day to the Douglas smelter. Rich sulphides are being found on the eighth level, carry ing high values in silver.

OLD DOMINION.

About the time that copper commenced its upward trend, a few years ago, the Phelps-Dodge Company secured a large interest in the Old Dominion and Globe property, adding to it mines theretofore acquired in the purchase of the stock of the United Globe Mines Company. Dr. Ricketts, the metallurgical expert of the company, was sent to Globe to build the finest smelter that money and brains could create. This smelter has been in operation for months, now producing about 2,000,000 pounds of converter copper monthly. The only thing lacking last year was sulphide ore for flux. Now it has been developed and in sufficiency. There are four great jackets in the present works, in addition to the concentrator. A fifth furnace is to be added early in the year, and by summer a large reverberatory furnace is to be completed, for the handling of the fine dust and of certain ores of lighter type. The company has bought much fluxing ore during the past two years, and its supply of outside ores will be increased most materially by the extension of the Gila Valley, Globe and Northern Railroad, now in progress, to a number of important mines to the northward of the camp.

SOUTHERN ARIZONA.

Active Operations Resumed in Old Arivaca District—Copper Camps All Busy.

TUCSON (Ariz.) Feb. 22.—Much activity is being shown in the old Arivaca district, which is located about sixty miles south of Tucson in the southern portion of Pima county. The most extensive work is under way on the Cerro Colorado property.

Work will shortly be resumed on the Liberty group of mines, nine miles from Arivaca. New York people own this property. The Arivaca district yielded considerable silver ore some years ago.

At the Paymaster property, south of the city, 100 tons of ore are being stoped every week. At the 200-foot level a big pump has been put in to take care of the water. The company has just received a fifteen-horse-power hoist and will build a telephone line to connect with the Mineral Hill camp. There are employed at the Paymaster seventy-five men.

The Indiana Copper Queen Company was incorporated here this week, by B. C. Brichta, F. R. Eberhart, Elmer W. Christensen and Francis A. Dixon. The company has a property in the Tucson Mountains six miles from Jaynes Station on the Southern Pacific.

Ore shipments are being continued from the Omega mine in the Helvetia district. Louis Zeckendorf of New York, formerly the leading merchant of Arizona, secured the property several years ago for $3500. Recently an offer of a quarter of a million dollars was refused for the mine. From the ore dump pile, ore that was supposed to be without value has been shipped to El Paso and the returns have aggregated $20,000.

The Calumet and Arizona has twenty-five men at work in the Mammoth district south of Tucson on the Copper Giant group of claims. One shaft is down 100 feet and another is down 150 feet. The Calumet and Arizona people are also pushing development work on the Snyder-Amagosa properties near the Twin Buttes district.

Good lead and silver ore is being found on the Copper Range and Arizona Mining Company properties in the Catalinas. About 2000 feet of development work has been done on these mines, which are owned by Boston parties.

M. P. Wright of Cananea and Charles M. Shannon will develop a property in the heart of the Cananea district.

Mining men who come here from Bisbee predict that the mining companies there will never surrender to the demands of the Western Federation of Miners, whose agitators have stirred up trouble by attempting to "organize" the camp.

BISBEE'S LABOR TROUBLE.

Mining Companies Working Toward Complete Shut-Down—Labor Scarce in Sonora.

BISBEE (Ariz.) Feb. 22.—The labor situation in Bisbee is practically unchanged. All the big mining companies are laying men off steadily, apparently working toward an entire shutdown. They have been joined in this by the Denn-Arizona, which has dropped almost its entire force. Heretofore this camp has been absolutely closed to Mexican laborers and no Chinaman has been allowed to stay in town over night. It is feared by some that the entrance of the Western Federation into the district will mean a dropping of the bars. The Mexican Consul at Naco has been in Bisbee several days this week, it is understood, for the purpose of placing Mexican miners at work, if possible. It is believed that the Copper Queen and the Calumet & Arizona will not assent to this, as their policy always has been to employ American miners of the best class and at the highest wages.

In spite of labor troubles, the Copper Queen is preparing to install an immense air compressor plant, the largest and best of its kind in the Southwest.

The next quarterly dividend of $5 of the Calumet & Arizona Mining Company is due March 20. It will probably be scaled down somewhat if the smelters are closed because of labor troubles.

The worst effect of the general deportation order concerning the Yaqui Indians is that the State of Sonora is being drained of its best laborers. The average Yaqui miner is considered twice as valuable a workman as the average Mexican. Even Mexicans can hardly be secured, and the mine owners are preparing to import thousands of Chinese and Japanese.

GROWS ON TREES.

Poetical Promoter Promises to Show Investors Where to Pick Ripe Dollars.

PRESCOTT (Ariz.) Feb. 23.—In the District Court, a report of H. R. Wood, Auditor of the books of the Little Brother Mining Company, practically charges Dr. J. Waterloo Dinsdale with fraud in the management of the corporation. It is charged that though the corporation legally has only 750,000 shares, 1,110,225 have been issued and that the issues have been made of thousands of shares as gifts and in exchange for services of various individuals to Dinsdale personally. One notation on the stub of a stock certificate book was for the issue of 40,000 shares, marked "stolen." The literature issued by the company to boom its stock sales is unique. It is full of quotations from the Bible and glittering generalities of the wealth that is to be secured by investment in the marvelous mine exploited. Dr. Dinsdale even dropped into verse, of which the following is a fair sample:

"Come, Little Brother, and sit on my knee,
And both of us wealthy will grow, you see;
If you'll invest your dollars with me
I'll show you where money grows on a tree."

The property of the corporation lies about ten miles west of Prescott on the Iron Springs divide, and includes sixteen claims, upon which very little development work has been done.

Work is to be resumed this week upon the Great Bachelor mine in Big Bug district, one of the best developed properties in the locality, its shaft being about 800 feet in depth. It is mainly owned by T. S. Henderson & Co. of St. Louis, locally represented by A. C. Truesner. It has produced about a half million in gold and silver in the past and became notorious during the operations of Henry B. Clifford & Co., who used it mainly in most successful efforts to sell stock. The Cliffords abandoned Yavapai county last year, after operations that included a score or so of mines, none of them "making good." It would appear, however, that the Cliffords are not done with Arizona. Under date of October 9, 1906, they have incorporated the Clifford Mining Company of Arizona, the stockholders being Henry B. Clifford and Maude M. Clifford of New York, and Ehud N. Darling of Washington. The objects of the corporation include about everything that could possibly be done by a mining company and the capital stock is $5,000,000, "full paid and non-assessable."

BOGUS LAND ENTRIES.

Homestead and Timber Claims on Mineral Land—New Mining Law Needed.

During the past two months complaints have been received by State Mineralogist L. E. Aubury from miners stating that mineral lands were being entered in California by homestead and timber entries and that the miners' rights were being infringed upon. The disregard for the truth prevailing in these applications caused President Roosevelt to issue a recent order to all United States land offices in California that where applications are made for patent, the land must be first examined and reported on by a government officer before patent shall issue.

The State Mineralogist has also received many complaints from miners in Kern, Inyo, San Bernardino and Riverside counties about the large number of claims which have been located by one person. In Death Valley, one man has made over 250 locations, and in Greenwater, one man has located a territory about ten miles in length.

The State Mineralogist says that under the present laws governing mining in this State, there appears to be no remedy. If the locations are made on mineral ground and the claims properly staked, and notice of location posted on the claim, the locator can hold them. Further, it is not even necessary for him to record his claims under California law.

Mr. Aubury says "the only way that I can see to overcome the difficulty is to make a change in our mining laws, and I am heartily in accord with and favor a law which will be similar to the present Nevada law. Every locator of a lode claim should be forced to properly stake or monument his claim on discovery. A copy of his first location notice should be filed for record with the district or County Recorder within thirty days. He should then be allowed sixty or ninety days in which to sink a shaft 4x6 feet, ten feet in depth, or a tunnel, drift or cut, equal to the same dimensions, this work to be performed only where evidence of mineral exists and not in the softest spot to be found on the claim. This should also apply to placer claims, insofar as the work should be performed on an exposure of gravel or gold bearing material, excepting where there is unquestionable evidence of a buried channel. After work has been performed, the locator should file for record his proof of labor and final notice."

Tailings.

The Crackerjack Consolidated Copper Company has just been incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000,000 in this city to operate the claims near those of the C. C. Crackerjack Gold Company. The property is undeveloped, but has good copper showing.

The Crackerjack Mining Company is installing a fifteen-horse-power hoist preparatory to sinking its shaft to 600 feet.

The following names have been added to the membership roll of the Chamber of Mines: John O. Dolfinger, Ernest A. Haggott, M. L. Newmark & Co., W. C. Patterson, Parmelee, Dohrman Company, Wade & Wade, Ernest Kennedy, Bascom A. Stephens and the Southern Refining Company.

Emil Holden, of Los Angeles, says he has found a large body of manganese iron ore, averaging 65 to 75 per cent., in the Harqua Hala Mountains, twenty-eight miles west of Wickenburg, Ariz.

A contract has been closed between the Boston-Johnnie Mining and Milling Company of Johnnie, Nev., and the Gold Bar Dredging Company, for the erection of a crushing and amalgamating mill upon the property of the Boston-Johnnie Company. The conditions are that this mill shall be in operation within ninety days, with a capacity of from twenty-five to forty tons per day, and shall be increased to 100-ton capacity upon thirty days' notice. Although this will be a custom mill, the incentive for its erection is the contract with the Boston-Johnnie to mill all its ore.

GOLDFIELD STILL GROWING.

MINES, REAL ESTATE AND RAILROADS BOOMING.

But the Boycotters and Mine Robbers Retain Control and Are Trying to Ruin All Who Will Not Submit to Their Dictation — General Strike Expected at Tonopah.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Feb. 21.—It is now a certainty that Goldfield is to be put in closer touch with the rest of the world by lines to build from Austin and from Ely. In a short time the Clark line will be completed between Goldfield and Rhyolite, affording a straight haul to Salt Lake and the coast. That competition will improve the service is evidenced by the strenuous endeavors of the Tonopah and Goldfield to first occupy the local field. Surveys for spurs are running to Diamondfield and other adjacent sections of the district. Los Angeles capital is to build one of the most modern of electric lines to serve the city of Goldfield and to extend to Jumbotown, Diamondfield and Tonopah.

Architects' plans now under execution show a half-million dollars' worth of business blocks, public edifices and residences in course of erection. The last assessment placed the city's real estate valuation at $900,000. A conservative estimate now would make it $2,000,000. Bonds will be issued for the building of another school building of capacity to accommodate pupils of a population of 40,000.

Six years ago there were seven banks in Nevada. Now there are forty-three and more being organized. George E. Roberts, director of the mint, returns from Nevada to Washington with this assertion: "The census of 1910 will undoubtedly show that for the decade from 1900 Nevada will have led all the other States of the Union in proportionate growth in wealth and population."

DIVIDEND PAYERS.

Both the Burns and the Loftus leases on Combination Fraction are in eight solid feet of ore that breaks clean across at better than $500 the ton. The Higginson and Mohawk Ledge leases on Jumbo Extension have showings in the same class. The Daisy has at least eighteen feet of ore that all ships without sorting, and the extent of the deposit is not yet known. To enumerate all the marketers of high-grade and payers of dividends for 1907, would take too much space, but the record of the year will show in Goldfield many a score like that of Mohawk for 1906, and Mohawk paid $100,000 bullion tax upon its production for the last nine months of last year. That's official, as coming from the books of State Bullion Tax Collector James H. Nevin. Moreover, Goldfield is not the only mining district in Nevada.

Seven years ago Tom Jaggers, a picturesque old character who has mined a lifetime, bought a Tule Canon claim for 75 cents. Last week he sold it for $27,000. That's once the prospector got his percentage of gain.

OLDEST MINE IN CAMP.

The newest flotation in Goldfield is of a claim which was among the very earliest locations by the original discoverers of Goldfield. The Goldfield Lander Mining Company is the corporation, the Lander lode is the claim, and Harry C. Stimler and C. B. Higginson are at the head of the organization, which proposes to develop the long-neglected property.

Harry Stimler located the Sandstorm, the first of the Goldfield mines, on December 4, 1902. Higginson stampeded to Goldfield soon after the announcement of Stimler's discovery of the Sandstorm and located the Jumbo Extension, Gold Bar, Simmerone, Vernal, Black Butte, Red Top Extension and Blue Bell. Others of Stimler's locations are May Queen, Nevada Boy and Columbia Mountain.

The Lander claim is of about twenty acres, a mile northeast of the Sandstorm and Kendall, and a mile west of the Daisy and Great Bend, upon the trend of whose vein systems it lies. For a length of 600 feet the east-and-west vein outcrops on Lander ground. Float found under the croppings in some places is worth $800 per ton in the yellow. The ledge has been explored by trenches, drifts and shafts, the deepest workings being about fifty feet below the surface.

Cox and Tobish, mining engineers, applied for and received the privilege of a lease on the ground, agreeing to sink 200 feet in the next nine months. This development will be additional to that outlined by the company.

TONOPAH BOYCOTTERS.

The I. W. W. now has control of the labor situation in Tonopah and a general strike seems inevitable. Until recently the Western Federation of Miners had held aloof from the I. W. W., but through the machinations of Vincent St. John, a notorious disturber who came to Goldfield from Cripple Creek, the miners were inveigled into the fold and are now subservient to the cooks, scavengers, porters and waiters, a tenet of the I. W. W. being that all labor is equal. Many Tonopah restaurants were closed by a strike instituted by the I. W. W. Then American Federation cooks and waiters were imported and the eating houses continued to thrive while the I. W. W. boycotted the daily paper and many of the mercantile houses of Tonopah who lent sympathy and aid to the cafés. These boycotts are still effective and the totemites hope, since they have absorbed the miners' federation, to ruin or tame the rebellious firms.

IMMUNITY OF THIEVES.

Recent attempts to convict miners guilty of stealing high-grade ore have proved howling farces. Caught red handed, any thief is safe so long as his trial occurs before his "peers," men who are abject slaves of the defiant labor party now in the saddle.

The Goldfield News has just issued a fine annual, in magazine form. The cost of the book was actually 35 cents per copy. It was offered to the news boys of Goldfield at that price, to be sold by them at 50 cents, a profit of 15 cents per copy. The boys, members of the I. W. W., which holds all labor equal, demanded that they be allowed half the 50 cents. This, of course, was denied them. They not only declined to sell the annual, but boycotted the regular weekly edition of the News and prevented its being handled by the news stands. The leaders of the I. W. W. are backing the news boys.

SEARCHLIGHT.

Good Indications of Ore Bodies on the Flat—Diamond Drill to Be Used in Exploring Ground.

SEARCHLIGHT (Nev.) Feb. 20.—The activity on the "flat" to the west of Searchlight continues unabated. The management of the Mammoth is preparing to install machinery upon its arrival here, after which the shaft will be sunk to water level with all possible speed. Some fine-looking ore was encountered in sinking the shaft on this property at a depth of thirty feet, and the shaft has been continued on the vein, which is widening as depth is attained. The Ascot shaft is down fifty feet and indications are very favorable for the finding of similar ore to that encountered on the Boulder mine, adjoining on the north. The Boulder Mining Company is sinking a shaft on the Hyack claim, and is now getting into a quartzose formation that horns well. Good assays have been made from this shaft, and Superintendent W. H. Bainbridge states that a gasoline hoist will be installed as soon as the 200-foot level is reached.

On the Wyoming Searchlight, Superintendent E. Carlson is drifting at the 225-foot level. He reports that his ore body is looking better after each shot. Adjoining the Wyoming on the west, the management of the Golden Rod is sinking for the 200-foot level. R. Kellogg has a contract to sink the shaft to water level. The furthest operator out on the "flat" is J. M. Taylor on the Santa Barbara. Drifts are being run at the 100-foot level on the vein, and the values are very encouraging to the owners.

A diamond drill will be in active operation in Searchlight within ninety days. This conclusion was reached at the meeting of the directors of the New York Searchlight Company held in New York a week ago. The company owns promising ground in the heart of the district, and adjoining producing properties. On the Watercpout claim owned by this company, a 357-foot vertical shaft is down 225 feet, showing some fine-looking copper-stained quartz, carrying gold and copper values. It is the intention of the management to use the drill and exploit the ground to a depth of 500 feet on all the properties and in that way ascertain the exact location of the ore bodies

REVIVAL OF PIOCHE.

Company Organized to Reopen Lyndon Mines in Old Comet District.

F. A. Morley, R. M. Ling, J. J. McCardy, E. F. Freudenthal, I. T. Dyer, E. Greenwood and H. D. Campbell are directors and officers of a company organized in Los Angeles to operate the Lyndon group of claims in the old Comet district, nine miles west of Pioche, Nev. The Lyndon mines were discovered by Mr. Freudenthal about twenty-five years ago, and for several years the richest of the ore was transported partly by wagon and partly by rail to Salt Lake City. In the meantime thousands of tons of ore, ranging in value from $10 to $25 per ton, was accumulated on the dumps, and with easier and less expensive transportation this ore now can be utilized, and the mine worked to advantage.

Many of the old producing mines of this district recently have been purchased by the Guggenheims, the Bambergers and other extensive companies, and it is predicted that Pioche will have a boom upon the completion of the branch line from Caliente.

The Ohio and Kentucky Mining Company, of which Samuel Newhouse of Utah is president, has acquired the tailings at Bullionville and will erect a mill just as soon as material can be brought in over the new road. These tailings comprise 250,000 tons of ore running twelve ounces of silver, 6 per cent. of lead and $2 in gold.

COPPERFIELDS DISTRICT.

Los Angeles Companies Opening Mines in the Whipple Mountains, San Bernardino.

Mining excitement is reported to be running high at Needles. The development of the surrounding country has drawn hither large numbers of seekers after wealth, and as a result sleeping accommodations are reported to be at a premium at the desert town.

A. J. Richardson, now of this city, but formerly of the Coeur d'Alene district of Idaho, where he still has interests; James L. Brice, A. L. McPherson, J. T. Argyle, Scott Harris and A. Ament have acquired properties on the Colorado River from U. S. Stewart of Needles and his associates and intend to begin development work at once. The properties are in a new district, which has been named Copperfields, and is located in the Whipple Mountains in southeastern San Bernardino county. The extent of the ore district has not yet been determined, but from the explorations during past years, it is believed that it will cover from twenty to thirty square miles, extending from Turtle Mountains on the west in a belt three to four miles wide to the Colorado River.

The absence of railroad transportation—forty miles to the nearest station—has prevented development until now that the Santa Fé's cut-off is nearing the district, and will pass south of Turtle and Whipple, within a few miles of these properties.

Three Los Angeles companies are already at work. The American Eagle has just crosscut the vein, bringing to light thirteen feet of high-grade copper sulphide, with only one wall in sight. The shaft is down 100 feet and makes daily from 1000 to 1500 gallons of water, strongly impregnated with copper sulphide.

Eight distinct veins are declared to show in good proportions the property of the Whipple Mountain Gold and Copper Mining Company with shipping grade of ore on the surface. Some of this is stated to have copper content equal to matte.

Bullfrog Development.

E. J. Lientzel, president of the Gold Bullfrog Mining and Milling Company, has just returned from an inspection of the company's property five miles north of the town of Bullfrog. He states that the company has some 350 feet of development, all in a large ore body. He also states that the company is to have a thirty-five-ton reduction plant in operation in a few weeks.

Besides the mines, the company, he says, also has water rights which are in themselves of value, the amount being about 1000 miner's inches.

The Bullfrog Plutus Mining and Milling Company, an affiliated company of the above, has its properties located four and a half miles from Bullfrog, between the Black Spire and the Gold Bar. One hundred feet of development have been done. A hoist is to be installed.

The Las Vegas and Tonopah Railroad will cross three claims of this company.

Strikes at Crescent.

CRESCENT, (Nev.) Feb. 20.—Crescent is excited by strikes that have been made during the past week. Superintendent A. J. Waddleton of the Golden Crescent Company was the first to report that in the Syndicate tunnel, several feet of high grade copper ore, carrying good gold values, had been cut. Following this came the report of the strike on the Old Mexican mine, owned by the Crescent Searchlight Company, where is a wine, six feet from the mouth of the shaft, five feet of rich ore has been encountered. The next find was made in the Yaqui mine, situated three miles east of Crescent Peak. Superintendent C. M. White uncovered a four-foot vein that returned assays running from $17.75 to $106.65 on the surface. The copper strike on the Chilstrom group has caused no end of excitement, as the owners refused to bond their property for $50,000 after the recent strike. Samples sent to Los Angeles assayed $109, showing 20 per cent. copper and the balance in equal proportions of gold and silver.

Fame Gets Abroad.

That Los Angeles is becoming widely known as a mining stock center is demonstrated by the letters of inquiry received by a local firm from all parts of the world. Within the last few weeks have come inquiries from Mexico, Port au Prince, Stockholm, Johannesburg, Tasmania, Australia, Bombay, St. Petersburg and Constantinople. The letter received from the last named city bore an address that proved that the writer had learned of the firm through its advertisement in The Times Midwinter edition, showing that this journal circulates as far away as the Sultan's domains.

Colonial Furniture
Reproductions

SIMPICITY of design, artistic character and genuineness of construction together with that old-time feeling embodied in Colonial furniture make it essentially the furniture of the hour and of the ages.

Without desiring to boast we say that the best and largest assortment of colonial furniture in the city is shown at the "California."

Our hand-made Colonial furniture has attained a distinctive reputation. There is an ever increasing demand for something better than simply "good" furniture.

Careful buyers study to make their homes a reflection of their own personality and taste. They desire furniture that is not only comfortable, durable and beautiful, but that has a touch of individuality—furniture that is cherished and handed down from generation to generation. Such buyers want furniture that will stand the test of the most critical judgment—furniture that is made of the most carefully selected mahogany—that is constructed by highly skilled artisans and that has the most exquisite finish.

Such furniture will give satisfaction always. Its beauty of design, its structural purity gives an added charm to the home of refinment.

A full appreciation of its merits can only be gained by personal inspection.

An hour or so spent in the study of the handsome pieces shown on our floors will be time profitably spent.

The prices of this furniture are not beyond the reach of the most moderate income.

Last Call Ross Oscillating Pump Stock at 50c per Share

You Will Pay $1 per Share After Midnight Saturday, March 2

We advertised that our stock would be raised to $1.00 per share upon completion of the factory. The rapidity with which stock has been selling, and the fact that capitalists are buying their limit, compels us to make the raise before we at first expected to do so. If the people realized the value of our proposition, there would be a stampede to get our stock at 50c per share. The history of the past is that every one that investigates and becomes awakened to the value of our pump and the possibilities of immediate returns from an investment without exception invests all the money he can command, and wishes he had more. We have closed our deal for machinery, which will be ready for installation as soon as the factory is completed. The rainy weather this week has hindered our progress somewhat, but we have the foundation completed, which required 100 barrels of cement. We are working as large a crew upon the framework as we can use to advantage. The building will be raised with great rapidity when once the timbers are all cut, so with fair weather we may reasonably expect to make a good showing on the factory next week.

Gentlemen:-

We acknowledge receipt, with thanks, of your order for complete outfit of machinery for your new plant.

We have a number of the machines for delivery as soon as they will be required, and the balance of them are now either enroute or being finished at the factories in the East.

We desire at this time to congratulate your company upon having been able to secure such favorable delivery, and when one considers the fact that machine tool deliveries are ranging all the way from three months to eighteen months, you can readily understand your good fortune in this connection.

The writer has sold a great many outfits of machinery in the East, and also was Manager of one of the largest machine companies in the country, and he can state, without qualification, that this outfit as purchased by your company represents the most modern and improved equipment of machines on the Pacific Coast.

We greatly appreciate your many courtesies in this connection, and thank you for the order. Awaiting your further favors, we remain,

Yours truly,
BARRON, RICKARD & McCONE

We Will Better Than Meet Our Calculations

The Ross Pump Factory—Building Begun

and be turning out pumps before we dared hope to do so thirty days ago. Our progress has been phenomenal. We incorporated January 16, and in 30 days have accomplished at least 6 months' work, and at a minimum cost. Why? Simply because we have a good thing. The demand for our pumps is wonderful. The most skilled experts have been sent to investigate our pump, and all with one accord give us credit for more than we claim, and they all admit that our pump has the highest efficiency of any pump in the world. Men of high standing have come in mad fury, ready to stamp into oblivion the very existence of our pump. But when once we explained the details concerning it, and showed our pump, which is on demonstration at 222 W. First street, they were convinced, and went away satisfied.

Mr. Ernest W. Pratt, our secretary and general manager, goes to Bakersfield this week with a company of capitalists and experts to demonstrate our large pump which has been successfully pumping 11 gravity oil for 14 months. Better make your reservation of stock before they return. Enough said. It is as easy to sell $500 worth or $1000 worth at 50c per share as it was to sell $50 worth or $100 worth at 25c a share. Our record is established. We pay as we go, and will continue to do so. As soon as we receive the necessary money to be able to manufacture pumps, so as to satisfy the ever-increasing demand, our stock cannot be bought at $5 per share. A delay on your part will be your loss in the great revenue which it will bring to our stockholders. Better come in and make your reservation and be sure of it.

"Of all the words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these—It might have been."

When every share of Ross Pump stock is worth from $5 to $25 per share, and we are paying $1 per share dividends, you will say: "Why didn't I buy stock at 50c per share? See what I might have made!"

Some people are slaves through life because they dare not venture. We believe in saving our money; but if we cannot convince you that an investment with us is safe and sure, DO NOT BUY. Plant your seed in good ground. Watch it grow. $1 will make $1000. $1000 will be worth $10,000 within six months. Our factory will be completed within 20 days, at which time nearly all our machinery will be here. Then we can build pumps to fill our orders. Come in and let us tell you what we have done and what we expect to do. Our stock will be raised to $1 per share at midnight Saturday, March 2. Buy now before it is too late. "Procrastination is the thief of time."

The land has ...secured adjacent to the ...the company already has in operation, and the work will be rushed to a speedy completion.

This gigantic undertaking is, among other things, calculated to meet the navy's need of facilities for putting a large fleet rapidly into condition after a long trip around the Horn, or in case of disaster to a fleet in engagement near the harbor of San Francisco.

The Secretary of the Navy recently called for the plans of the two present drydocks, and the drawings were made and forwarded to Washington. Although the company which will build the new dock is a private corporation, it is understood that the work has been undertaken with the encouragement of the Navy Department, which is also said to have expressed a wish that it be carried to an early completion.

Secrecy has been maintained in the matter, and it was not until the surveyors were at work at Hunter's Point that the information as to the purpose of the company leaked out. The surveyors have been at work for a week, and from the statements that they made to the other workmen employed there it was learned that the new dock will be 1050 feet in length, 170 feet longer than the famous dock at Glasgow and 225 feet longer than the Alexander dock in Belfast harbor.

SURVEYORS AT WORK.

From the surveying party it was learned that the cost of the dock when completed would be $1,250,000 and that the designs and plans had been drawn by Howard C. Holmes, the engineer who has built the docks along the water front and is at present engaged on work for the Western Pacific and the Key Route railroads.

When Holmes was seen he expressed surprise that anything should have leaked out concerning the plans of the drydock company and refused to make public the designs which he had prepared. He admitted, however, that the length was to be 1050 feet and that the depth of the dock over sill would be 36½ feet. Holmes was ready enough to talk of foreign docks and other docks in the United States and furnished a table which shows by comparison the gigantic size of the stone basin that is to be built at San Francisco.

Holmes was the engineer in charge of the construction of the larger of the two present docks at Hunter's Point and refers with pride to the fact that it was built at a cost of $632 per linear foot, as compared with a cost of from $1000 to $2000 a foot in other work of the kind.

Some idea of the size of the dock may be gained from the fact that it will hold the two Cunarders, the Etruria and the Umbria, at one time. Even the Hill liners, the Dakota and the Minnesota, could either of them be lifted out of the water in a dock of that size and leave 300 feet to spare.

WILL HOLD TWO BATTLESHIPS.

The San Francisco Drydock Company has two docks at Hunter's Point, one of them 755 feet in length, but the growing commerce of the port has often made it necessary for steamers to wait their turns for their periodical cleaning and painting. In the event of it being necessary to put a fleet of battleships speedily into shape after a long voyage the only docks available here at present are those at Mare Island and the larger basin at Hunter's Point. But with the completion of the new dock and the floating dock which the Union Iron Works proposes to construct it will be possible to have five battleships out of the water at one time. Two of them can be accommodated at one time in the former.

The new dock will be of concrete and stone and will rest on a foundation of solid rock. Great stability is necessary to support the weight of a ship on the blocks. When the nature of and magnitude of the work is considered, the cost of $1,250,000 is to be regarded as a low figure. The navy dock at New York cost the government over $1,800,000, and it is hardly more than one-third the size planned for the new San Francisco dock.

The president of the San Francisco Drydock Company, William Babcock, was out of the city last night. The reason for the secrecy with which the work has been commenced could not be learned, but it is thought that it was advised to prevent any comment in connection with the possibility of conflict with Japan.

The following table shows the dimensions and cost of the other great drydocks of the world and the superiority of the proposed dock at Hunter's Point:

NO HORSES FROM PHILIPPINES.

Great Care Being Taken to Prevent Importation of Bad Live Stock Disease.

The Agricultural Department has overruled the military department of the government, and as a result Gen. Leonard Wood will not be permitted to bring back from the Philippines into the United States when he returns his favorite riding horse and his much prized dogs. The general expects to return soon and desired to send the animals ahead. Secretary Wilson is taking extraordinary precautions to guard against the introduction into the United States of surra, a disease quite common among live stock in the Philippines.

The bacillus of surra is described as a snakelike creature that multiplies rapidly and the disease germs are transmitted most commonly by flies. The Agricultural Department holds, therefore, that an examination and clean certificates at the port of departure in the Philippines is not a sufficient safeguard against the introduction of the disease, for flies may infect the animal after it is on board the steamer. Gen. Wood has yielded, after some reluctance, to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Not long ago the wife of an army officer returning from the Philippines tried to bring in a pet dog. The animal was turned back at the port of San Francisco, and later a secret attempt was made to enter the animal by the Canadian border, but the vigilant agents of Secretary Wilson, on the lookout ever for surra bacilli, apprehended the tabooed canine and branded him with the figures "23," regardless of womanly sobs.

BALLOONING NOT DANGEROUS.

LESS RISK TO PASSENGERS THAN RAILROADING.

The Number of Persons Killed While Traveling on Trains Has More Than Doubled in Ten Years, While the Number of Injured Has Trebled.

Is the work of the aeronaut safer than that of the trainman on American railroads? Is there less chance of being killed in steering an airship than taking a train over a division? It would almost seem that such was the fact, judging by the recent report of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The startling statement is made that the ratio of both killed and injured to the total number of passengers carried is twice as large as ten years ago. In other words, it is only half as safe to travel on steam roads now as a decade since.

What it means to be an employé in the operating department of a steam railroad will be understood in the following terrible showing:

In 1905 one employé was killed out of every 411 employed.

In 1905 one employé was injured out of every twenty-one employed.

In the above figures employés in every department are counted, including the thousands engaged in the safe occupations of clerks, telegraph operaotrs, depot men, etc. When the score is counted among the men actually engaged in operating the trains—that is enginemen, firemen, conductors and other trainmen—the rate of fatalities is astounding.

In 1905 one trainman was killed out of every 133 employed.

In 1905 one trainman was injured out of every nine employed.

With the increased use of heavy and vestibuled cars; improve air brakes, steam heat in place of stoves, gas and electric lights, gates and fences in depots, block signals, double tracks, electric headlights, and other safety devices, one would suppose that, however dangerous might be the position of the trainmen, that the passenger had been very materially safeguarded. A statement that it was twice as safe to travel on the passenger trains of ten years ago than today would find few hearers who would believe it; and yet such is the fact, according to the best government authority. In proof of this assertion note these figures:

In 1905 one passenger was killed to each 1,375,856 carried.

In 1895 one passenger killed to each 2,984,832 carried.

In 1905 one passenger injured to each 70,655 carried.

In 1895 one passenger injured to each 213,651 carried.

The ratio of fatalities to passengers carried more than doubled, and of passengers injured more than trebled. When computed on the basis of passenger miles traveled we find—

In 1905 one passenger killed for each 44,320,576 passenger miles.

In 1895 one passenger killed for each 71,696,743 passenger miles.

When stated in another form the showing is apparently a good one, for during the year 1905 there were carried as passengers 738,834,667 persons, or about eight times the population of the entire United States, and of this vast army only 487 were killed. But while this by itself would seem to be a commendable record, it is overshadowed by the other statements showing an increase in ten years of 129 per cent. killed and 350 per cent injured. Nor is 1905 an exceptional year, for it shows more deaths and accidents than 1904.

Is the percentage of death and danger going to continue to increase with the inevitable increase in the number of passengers? The American people travel more each year and will continue to do so as the country becomes richer and more densely populated.

And what is the explanation of this retrogression? Is it in the higher speeds, or the heavier engines and cars, or the crowding of too many trains on too few tracks? It would hardly seem to rest with the employés, for never in the history of American railroads has there been so high a grade of employés in the service as there is today.

Then what is the reason?—[Popular Mechanics.

Tellurides and Scheelite.

(Silver) Feb. 10.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In a small ...registered mail we are sending ...you samples of ore, two of ...which we believe to be tellurides. If ...you can name them mineralogically and publish facts relating to ...them, you will ...oblige a reader who has us "buffaloed" ...rather truly.

B. T. & D.

In the parlance of the ...miners in the hills, the two samples ...submitted. The large specimen (popularly known as ...the "buffalo," which is of an iron ...gray streak black gray, hardness ...6, specific gravity 7, and malleable. ...Crystallization orthorhombic. ...Fracture uneven and scaly. Basal cleavage ...distinct. Gold, 2; lead, 14; antimony, ...0; sulphur and tellurium.)

...Heat in a blow pipe or charcoal two ...globules are formed. That nearest ...the coating yellow. Surrounding ...the coating is one of white, ...which is volatile.

...The second specimen is calaverite, and resembles that from Cripple Creek, Colo.

It is yellowish bronze in color. Streak pale yellow. Luster plainly metallic, and 2.6 in hardness. Specific gravity 9.05. Of uneven fracture, massive in structure and of doubtful crystalline system.

"Calaverite is soluble in aqua regia with separation of silver chloride, and in common with ores of tellurium, before the blow pipe colors the flame a greenish blue and gives a button. The calaverite button is that of a decidedly yellow gold."

The above quoted matter is from a very high authority. It is true that calaverite varies somewhat in formula, but that of Colorado and also your specimen is made up of tellurium 55.5 and gold 44.5 percentages, respectively.

As a form of convenience tellurium, selenium, arsenic, and sulphur need not be classed among metallic bodies.

"Tellurium has a silvery luster; in texture it is crystalline and brittle. It fuses at about the same temperature as antimony, crystallizes easily from a fused state, and appears to be isomorphous and antimony and arsenic."

If a small fragment of tellurium ore is placed on a saucer and a drop of concentrated sulphuric acid is dropped on the fragment and then saucer and contents subjected to a gentle heat a beautiful purple-red color will quickly appear.

Tellurium is a very deleterious content with ores of copper even to a very low percentage.

"If tellurium or its compounds are introduced into the human system, they render the breath fetid by producing a strong garlic odor under the effect of the gastric juice. Tellurium, appears, therefore, to represent the "black sheep" in the family of metals, and has in consequence not found any commercial employment as yet, though its electrical conductivity and resistance, which latter is very great, may lead to its application in that line in the future" (Ohly.)

The sample on which you are "buffaloed" is a good grade of scheelite (calcium tungstate,) and there is no reason why a deposit of such should not be found east of you and towards Osceola, where wolframite and hubnerite (two other ores of tugnsten) occur in good grade and quantity.

Scheelite possesses an adamantine luster. White, gray, pink, brown and yellow in color; 4.2 to 4.8 in hardness. Specific gravity 6 to 6.2. B. B., it fuses to any opaque glass when cold. A good test for the mineral is to powder it and place the powder in a small porcelain cup. Add to the powdered mineral some c.p. hydrochloric acid, handsomely covering the powdered mineral with the acid. Heat the mixture by slow boiling for five minutes, when a yellow residue will separate out. This residue is tungstic acid of commerce and is soluble in aqueous ammonia. Scheelite is known as calcium tungstate (tungstate of lime,) and is worth (if over 60 per cent. tungsten,) $300 per ton, f.o.b. cars.

PILLSBURY'S PARAGRAPHS.

I have information that leads me to believe that the present State forestry law is in grave danger in this Legislature. Such of the forests of California as have not already been devastated have fallen, or are falling, into the hands of great eastern lumbering corporations, into the same hands that have laid waste the forests of Maine, Michigan and Minnesota, and they will have as little regard for the future of California as they have had for that of the States mentioned. They will go into our unrivaled Sierra pineries, fell its giants, leave the slashings where they fall to be dried into tinder, then permit the flames to sweep through the area turning it into a furnace of hell and, passing on, allow tangled chaparral to spring up about the charred trunks that still stand and call that "developing a country."

The present forestry law could not have been enacted without executive influence exerted on its behalf. That law cannot now be amended, as experience has shown the need of it, without executive influence coming to its aid. California is being invaded by as merciless a band of barbarians as ever ravaged an empire. They are rich, they are ravenous, they are organized, and if the people leave the Legislature to itself it will be dominated by this influence. Governor Pardee was farsighted enough to see the impending calamity and had moral courage enough to do his part in warding it off.

It is inconceivable that Governor Gillett, woodsman that he is, can be less so and yet the people can afford to take no chances even on him. Every one who reads this paragraph should turn at once to his desk and write a letter to the Governor adjuring him to permit the Legislature to take no backward step in this concern so vital to California. Then write to each of his representatives in the Legislature and tell them plainly that their vote on this issue will be regarded at home as a test vote. It will tell whether they are for the people or for the corporations.

The bill in question is Assembly Bill 106. Its purpose is to maintain a State board of forestry, with the Governor at its head, which board shall organize the forestry forces for protection against fire, cooperate with the counties to the same end, cooperate and instruct in local forest rehabilitation work, distribute forestry laws and bulletins for purposes of public forestry education, make arrests and prosecute those guilty of violating fire protection laws and, where the State board decides it to be necessary to public safety, enforce the burning of slashings when they can be burned without danger in order that they may not when thoroughly dried, get on fire in the height of the dry season to spread desolation in all directions. Surely these are reasonable regulations and it would seem that no man, and no interest, not gangreened with greed, could find occasion for offense in them.

If the people of California are not dead to the world they will at once—for the issue is a question of days—make the Legislature and the executive office know the force of public opinion. Two cents in money, five minutes in time, ten thousand citizens speaking their thoughts, and the forests of California will be conserved. Otherwise California will go backward and the ruthlessness of ravage will go forward. The purpose of a State forestry policy is to make those into whose hands this splendid wealth of woods has fallen so use that wealth as not to injure other interests, and to so use it as to leave a rehabilitated forest for the enjoyment of our children's children. In God's name, is not that sound doctrine?

Whether the taxpayers of the State shall be called upon to contribute a larger amount than they now do to the support of common schools and whether school text-books shall be furnished free to pupils have been two of the burning educational issues at this session of the Legislature. The bill to make the school census include children from 4 to 18 years of age, instead of from 5 to 17 as now, may be regarded as dead. But the bill which proposes to require the State to contribute $8 per census child instead of $7 as now, is very much alive and will probably go to the Governor. If it does, it will offer a hard nut for him to crack, because it means an increase of about $450,000 per year in the necessary appropriations and that would add three cents to the State tax rate. As everybody knows, the Governor is very solicitous to keep taxes down.

The free text-book bill is another serious problem. To put free text-books into the hands of all the public school children would cost probably $200,000 a year, but the sentiment among the labor unions and with many other persons besides, is in favor of having the State do this. There is another element which says that free text-books are very well but that there is a limit to the burdens the State government can bear, and that the counties and not the cities should meet the cost of free school books. Both contentions are represented by bills now before the Legislature but the county-book bill is the one most apt to win out. It is not made obligatory upon each and every county to furnish free books; the idea is to permit a majority of the school boards of the county to decide whether or not books shall be bought at the public expense. So a new issue is likely to be injected into county affairs, and that means no doubt, into county politics.

The defalcation of the county treasurer of Contra Costa county, combined with the deposit policy in regard to public moneys, seems likely to lead to one new departure in State financiering. Under the law permitting country treasurers to retain, at certain times, and under certain conditions, school moneys belonging to the State, some treasurers have been allowed to retain large sums even after the State school apportionment has been made, and the excess is due to be paid into the State treasury. It is now said that the State Controller and the State Treasurer have decided to exercise the power given them by the law and call on county treasurers to settle promptly by turning in whatever excess of funds remains in their hands after the school apportionment has been made. Now that the State is to have a chance to get interest on unused funds there is a reason for requiring prompt settlements.

I have been treated by Dr. Schiffman for years. I have tried all his different methods, and I can say unhesitatingly no dentist or physician has ever operated with such success or skill. In extracting my teeth he did it without any pain to me. It is a great pleasure to me to recommend him and his method of treatment.
MILO M. POTTER,
Prop. Van Nuys Hotel and Hotel Potter Santa Barbara.

Ten years ago a reputable dentist of Va. told me that a certain molar tooth could not be satisfactorily saved, and that it would probably not be of service for one year. It has not only served me for ten years, as Dr. Schiffman saved and crowned it, and comparatively speaking, without pain. I sing his praise.
OWEN M. ANDREWS,
Pastor M.E. Church, South, Cor. 6th and Mateo sts.

On account of some unfortunate experience I had in the extraction of my teeth, became a great coward in this respect. Today Dr. Schiffman extracted one of my very refractory teeth without causing me one particle of pain. D. K. TRASK,

Several years ago Dr. Schiffman did some crown work for me which has proved entirely satisfactory. The work was done painlessly and with great skill. It gives me great pleasure to recommend him.

Dr. Schiffman has done a large amount of bridge and plate work for me, which was done in a very satisfactory manner.

Flexible Rubber Dental Plates

Have many advantages over the old thick, cumbersome, ordinary rubber plates and even over gold plates, being much lighter and thinner. These plates are flexible, only a trifle thicker than heavy writing paper, fit closed and adhere better to the roof of the mouth. Particles of food and small seeds cannot get under them. They will last longer, are stronger than any others and will not break, as they will give first, being flexible. Dr. Schiffman's own process, and made only by us.

Our Guarantee Is Good

We refer you to the Merchants' National Bank as to our reliability and responsibility.

No boys or students to experiment on you. With us you are not experimenting. We have stood a 14-year's test in Los Angeles.

There Is No Need of Paying High Prices

FOR FINE Dental Work. Our modern methods enable us to do the very best dental work of all kinds without pain at prices within reach of all.

Dr. Schiffman extracted eight teeth for me without a particle of pain, and afterward made me a full upper flexible plate, which fits me perfectly.

I have given them a good test, as it has been a year and a half since they were made. I gladly recommend the doctor to all who are in need of dental service.

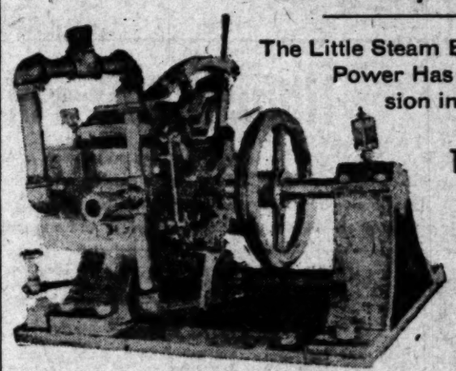
Prophecy Fulfilled--Shares in the Crescent Rotary Steam Engine Will Advance March 6

All Stock Remaining Unsold One Week From Next Wednesday Will Be Advanced to Dollar and Fifty Cents a Share.



10-Horse Power Size Engine Will Set Nicely on Your Parlor Table So Compact and Small Is It

The Little Steam Engine That is Revolutionizing Steam Power Has Made a Tremendous Impression in the Commercial World.

This Stock Now Selling at the Price of One Dollar a Share Is a Greatest Industrial Proposition Ever Marketed in Los Angeles.

The prophecy of this paper a week ago that the stock of the Crescent Rotary Engine Company would go to $1.50 a share finds realization in the announcement of Mr. James Aubin Larson, 212 Mercantile Place, that after next Wednesday one week—or March 6, any share remaining unsold would go to the higher price of one dollar and fifty cents. As nearly as is possible Mr. Larson will distribute the stock in the intervening time in smaller allotments of, say blocks of one hundred shares or more at the old and original price of one dollar. We know of no better argument to offer on the value of this stock today as an investment at the dollar and a half price, than to repeat what has already been said in the papers regarding the sale of certain German rights, and the words of Mr. Larson himself is best authority as to the extent of this big deal. When in a published interview a week or such a matter ago, he gave expression to his connection with the opening of these negotiations. We give short synopsis of that interview.

There has been considerable talk in the newspapers and on the streets about this contemplated sale of the German Rights for the manufacture of this Rotary Engine, and of this matter I wish to say that it is not idle talk, for I myself first opened negotiations in this matter. These negotiations have been with Mr. W. Scheck, who, with his brother, owns the Hercules Manufacturing Company of Cassel, Germany, employing 7000 men. Mr. Scheck's brother was Ambassador to this country for six years and in consequence of which Scheck Bros. stand high in governmental affairs—and because of their enormous business and use of steam power, became interested in the wonderful possibilities of this Rotary Engine. The consideration of the German rights is about one million dollars.

The shareholder in this company, it may interest you to know, is likewise proportionate owner in all of the valuable patents covered in the several applications of Mr. H. I. Call, the inventor. These patented privileges and rights, like all such great industries, as Westinghouse's, Edison's and others, are worth in themselves millions, which will make a big profit to the share owner in this company.

To the reader who has not gone into this matter and proven the marvelous utility and effectiveness of this little wonder in the steam engine line, there is on exhibition one of the actual ten-horse-power size models at 212 Mercantile Place, and if you are a buyer of shares Mr. Larson will take you to another place in the city where he has another model of same size under steam, and he will show you stunts that no other steam engine on earth can perform. Here are a few of the features of the engine which without doubt places it in a class of its own and quite out of the ordinary, though it is not a freak engine by any matter of means.

Costs Less

The cost of the Crescent Rotary Engine is the one feature that will commend it to all users of steam power more emphatically than any other merits that it possesses. Made of only three principal parts, it is easy to see in what manner the cost has been reduced. There are no complex parts. The three components of this engine are easily made, have no intricate combinations, the only absolute necessity being that they be accurately made and as carefully adjusted. With these two points regarded the operation of the machine is accomplished. The ten-horse-power size Crescent Rotary Engine can be placed upon the market with profit to the manufacturers at a cost of less than three-fourths the cost of the same size of the old reciprocating type. The cost of a steam engine is a point that makes the purchase of one a matter of moment. The Crescent Rotary Engine has absolutely solved the question of cost.

Shares in Company the Best Industrial Stock in the World.

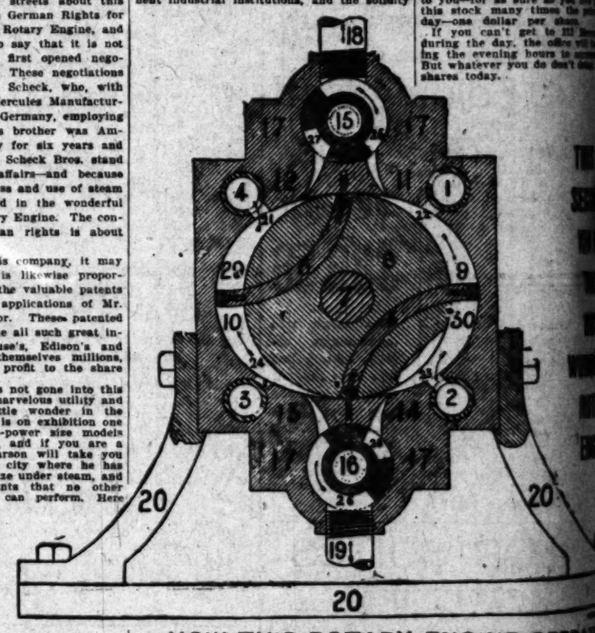
The fortunes that are made out of prominent industrial institutions, and the solidity of this form of investment in the realm of finance to be to put one's funds. The which surrounds the big day—the enormous premiums stocks are always held, est argument in favor of nue for wise investment. owner in 90 per cent. of the terprises bought his holdings began to show life and real experience of the Crescent Rotary Engine Company is proving this their proposition. Just as soon tory began work filling time, and now six months summation of the German tion, and the proving of and wearing quality of commercial product, larger "snooping" around to get stock at the bed-rock price, investors are certainly offered industrial security ever sold.

The week or ten days before the price will be held at one in reasonable blocks of perhaps more, presents an opportunity but seldom in the life of the or woman.

It is comforting, at least, which, within ten days, will vance of 50 per cent. This can freeze onto now at the gine which has begun to steam power.

Hundreds of mail orders have come to the local office if you are still holding of the mistake of your life if you on a block of shares immediately nation in this may mean thousands to you—for as sure as you live this stock many times the price day—one dollar per share.

If you can't get to 212 during the day, the office will be ing the evening hours to But whatever you do don't shares today.



No Dead Centers

The fact that steam is always at work on some part of the area solves the dead center objection. This engine may be started at any point on the circumference of the cylinder. By one action of the lever, the action of the entire machine may be instantaneously reversed without coming to a stop.

Weighs Less

The matter of weight is one of no small significance. This is especially true when one considers the remarkable difference between the Crescent Rotary Engine and the old style type. A ten-horse power of the Crescent type weighs 150 pounds, stripped. The old style of the same horse power weighs from 500 to 750. Four-fifths reduction in weight is a gain that will be appreciated by those whose experience in the use of steam engines has made this fact apparent.

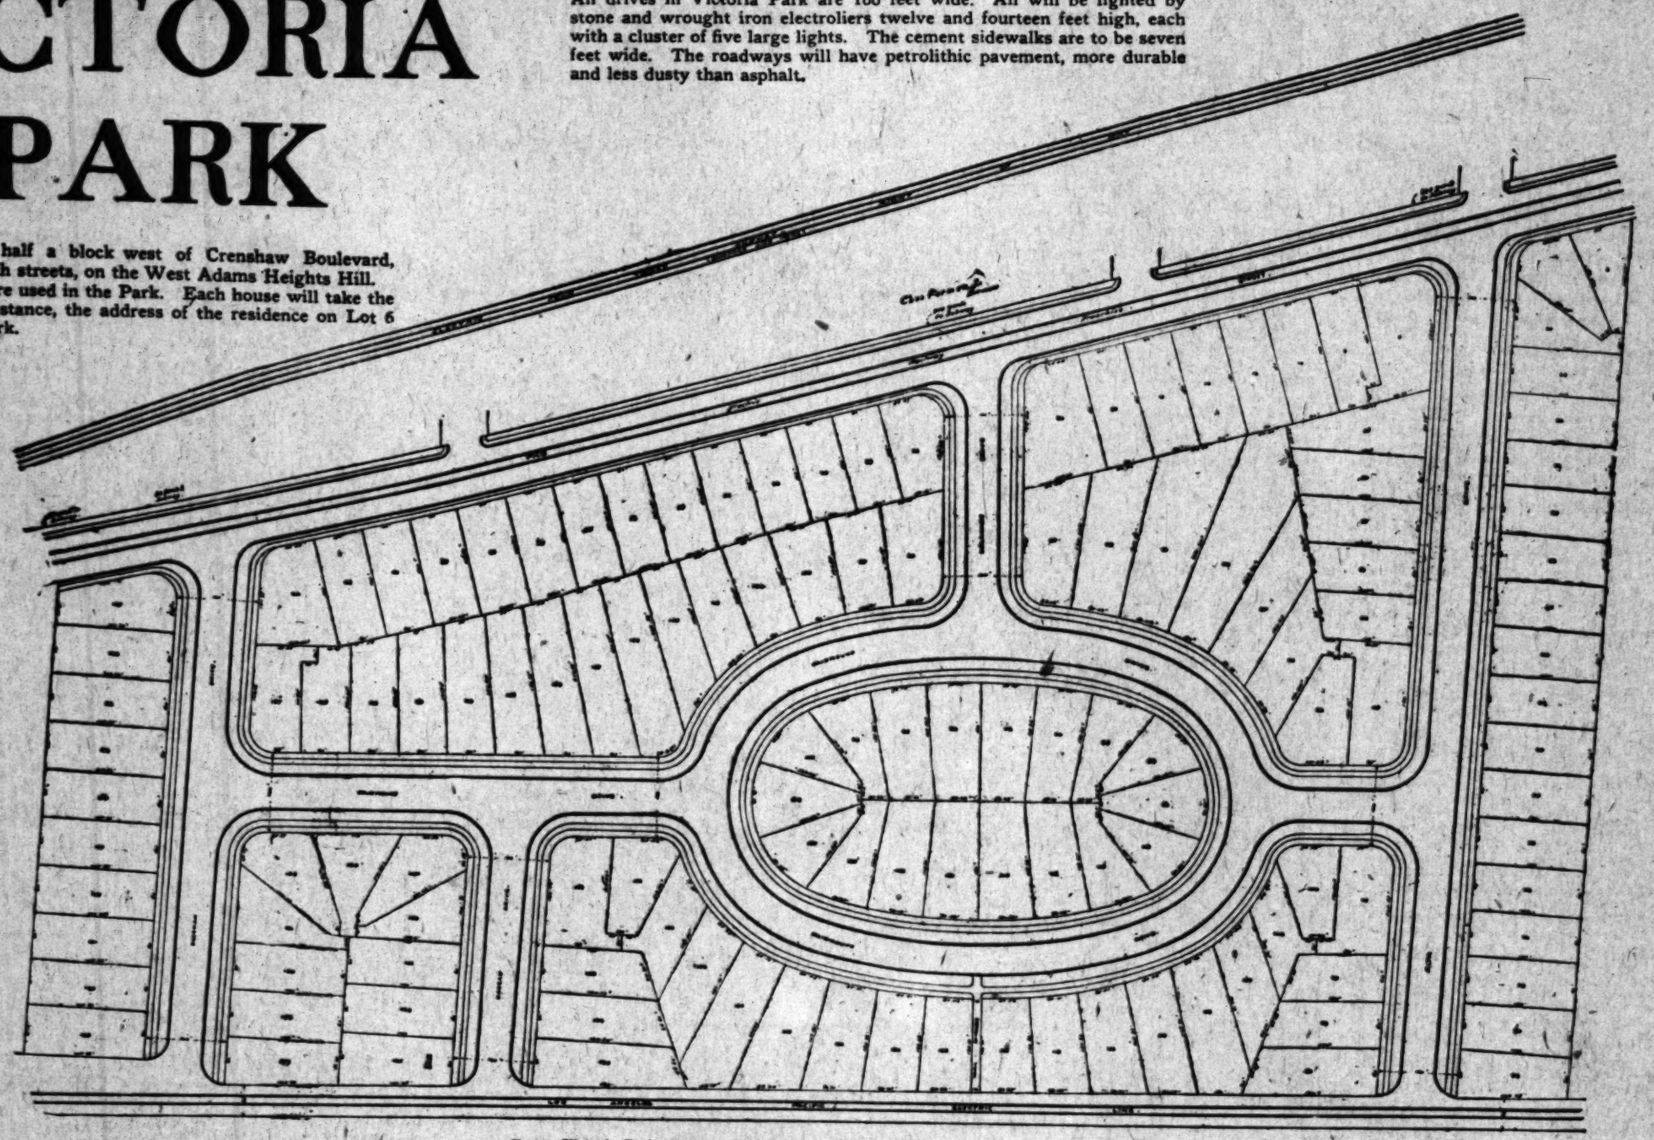
VICTORIA PARK

A private residence park, half a block west of Crenshaw Boulevard, between Pico and Sixteenth streets, on the West Adams Heights Hill. No driveway names are used in the Park. Each house will take the number of its lot. For instance, the address of the residence on Lot 6 will be No. 6, Victoria Park.

All drives in Victoria Park are 100 feet wide. All will be lighted by stone and wrought iron electroliers twelve and fourteen feet high, each with a cluster of five large lights. The cement sidewalks are to be seven feet wide. The roadways will have petrolithic pavement, more durable and less dusty than asphalt.



CAR SERVICE—Victoria Park is on the West Sixteenth street car line, which runs along the south edge of the park. Along the north edge, on Pico street, the Pico car line extension, for which cash bonus has been paid, will soon be running. Just the right distance from Victoria Park—63 yards to a block and a half—is the right of way for the four-track subway line, which will have a running time of seven minutes from Victoria Park to the business center.

To see Victoria Park, telephone us for automobile appointment, or take West Sixteenth street car line to our branch office in the park.

OW CAN SHE MARRY COREA?

ington Society Asks of Miss Fleming.

n Events and Gossip at National Capital.

rnia Wedding Booked for Early Spring.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—Since the days of Lent, society has turned "about face" and is now busily planning for the Easter and after season. Many will go South for the interim, and some will go to their homes as soon as Congress adjourns, but the great majority will remain to enjoy Washington at this time, which is during the spring months.

Social events, however delightful in their season, are not crowding present-day functions from the tapis and the devotees of pleasures will not die of ennui during the penitential forty days. Dining and lunching to-day the same as in the height of the season, and wedding bells do not sound merrily, for the ban on Lenten weddings seems to have been effectually imposed. The first of the international affairs, Miss India Belle Fleming, daughter of Colonel and Mrs. J. Fleming, of this city, is being charmingly entertained by the diplomatic set, in anticipation of her marriage on February 27, to the Nicaraguan minister, Señor Don Luis Felipe Corea. Various pretty conceits are being used to determine which of her intimates will be the next to be led to the altar, have been a feature of the week in her honor.

The happy man in the case has been a visitor to this capital since the holidays and is second oldest in point of service on the list of diplomatic representatives from Latin America. He is popular, too. However, there are those who frankly say over the question, "How can Miss Fleming, who is pretty, and wealthy, leave the country in which she is an only daughter, to marry a man more than twice her age and about whom such horrid stories are said, and never denied, when the engagement to a rich young American was announced some months ago?"

Señor Corea is a Roman Catholic, holding the faith of his ancestors while Miss Fleming, the bride-to-be, a Presbyterian. The marriage must therefore take place at the home of the bride's father, Dr. Tuenis Hamlin, pastor of the Church of the Covenant, Washington, and the ceremony be witnessed by relatives of the family and friends of the bridegroom. A wedding breakfast will follow, at which probably all Washington will be present.

The millionaire Ambassador from Nicaragua will act as best man and a number of pretty maids will attend the bride, after marriage will be the only Nicaraguan woman presiding over a diplomatic establishment in Washington.

In the most happy circumstance, the birthday of Mrs. Nicholas Longworth this year, fell upon her regular day "at home," as a Congressional hostess. Many called to offer their felicitations and express the hope that if she wishes, she may live to be seven times her present age, and may always be as happy as she now is.

Five days after she was twenty-three, the President's daughter celebrated the first anniversary of her marriage, by making a visit to her brothers, Theodore, Jr., who is a freshman at Harvard, and Kermit, a student at the Groton Preparatory School.

James Bryce, the new British Ambassador to this country, is due to arrive in Washington about the time this letter goes to print, and already great preparations are making for his reception, for, according to his biographers, no such man ever became a member of the foreign diplomatic corps of America. Indeed, if he accomplishes one-half that is expected of him while here, the millennium will have started for Uncle Sam and John Bull, and our cousins on the north will have to look for trouble elsewhere than in the United States. Should he by any chance achieve all the success of which his previous record is the prophecy, he will make for himself a name that shall be above all other names in diplomacy and statecraft. As it is, he is the peer of any man in the world's official world, and society is ready to pay him splendid homage.

The fatted calf has been killed in anticipation of his coming, and the dressed product marked with the government inspector's sign of approval. Official entertainers have even secured a copy of Dr. Wiley's latest list of approved foodstuffs so that the digestion of the distinguished visitor within our gates may not be unnecessarily imperiled at the beginning of his career in "the American commonwealth," about which he has written so learnedly.

The stately embassy on Connecticut avenue has been refurbished and rearranged until the interior is as simple as the most ardent devotee of the simple life could wish the official surroundings of King Edward's representative to be. The exterior of the building, always conspicuous for its elegant simplicity, now seems particularly emblematic of the life and character of its occupants, and in view of this the fashionable world is inclined to believe there will be no imposing receptions or holiday balls for the frivolous ones during the Bryce incumbency.

One of the most charming assemblies of the week met at the legation of Colombia on Tuesday, when the Minister's wife, Senora Cortez, and her daughter, Madame Guzman, held an afternoon reception, assisted by a number of personal friends from official and residence circles. The Minister, who is on his second mission to Washington, is a man of letters and of means, with all the breadth and international experience of such a combination. He and his family are therefore an acquisition to that ever-increasing circle known in Washington as cultured rather than official. To this set belongs also the French Ambassador and Madame Jusserand, who are extremely popular with the city's litterateurs. The latter assembled en masse recently, in response to an invitation from the walking encyclopedia of Washington, and living part of the Library of Congress, Dr. Ainsworth R. Spofford. To not know Dr. Spofford is to argue one's self unknown. To know him at his best, is to meet him in his home, surrounded by an atmosphere of "hominess" as well as of litterature. Dr. Spofford is not a "young old man," but he carries his eighty odd years well, maintaining a wonderfully bright eye and the clearness of intellect that won him fame five decades ago.

Messrs. W. S. and T. E. Hammond, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Carr of Los Ange- George W. Reed of Oakland; Mr. and George W. Reed of Oakland; Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Knox of Berkeley, and F. M. Gallagher of Santa Barbara are the Californians seen on Pennsylvania avenue within the week.

Californians in general and Miss Ethel Moore of Oakland, in particular, are being delightfully entertained by Mrs. Vrooman and her sister, Mrs. Stephen Abbot. The latter, who came over from West Point for the month, has shared the pleasure of being hostess with Mrs. Vrooman at a series of three at homes, as many luncheons and several afternoons for cards.

THE AUSTRIAN INCOME TAX.

NEARLY A MILLION PERSONS ARE ASSESSED.

The System Is Not Popular and Many Persons Seek Means to Evade the Tax—It Touches Everybody Down to People Earning Only Twenty Dollars a Month.

Nearly a million persons now pay an income tax in Austria, says the Vienna correspondent of the Chicago News. In 1905 the exact number was 955,599, or rather more than 2½ per cent. of the total population. Their incomes in the aggregate amounted to 3,564,560,000 crowns, or $712,912,000, upon which the government collected taxes amounting to nearly $12,000,000. Of these 900,000-odd people more than 38 per cent. are officials and employés of various kinds, 28 per cent. carry on independent businesses, 14 per cent. are capitalists, 16 per cent. house owners and 7 per cent. landed proprietors.

Austria has a graduated income tax which begins very low down in the social scale. In fact, persons earning $240 a year or less than $5 a week, are liable to assessment. These do not pay much, it is true—only a matter of $1.20. From this minimum, however, the tax advances much more rapidly than the income upon which it is asessed. For example, upon $2400 the tax is 2%, an increase of fifty times in the tax as compared with ten times in the income. Something over $2,000,000 was the largest income upon which the tax was paid in 1905 and upon this the government collected slightly over $100,000. Twenty-one persons paid tax upon incomes of $200,000 and upward and 226 persons on $40,000 and over.

How small the general earnings are in Austria is shown by the fact that 456,610 persons—that is, nearly 45 per cent. of the taxpayers—paid duty upon incomes ranging from $240 to $375 a year. And it is safe to assume that the majority of these earn less than $300 a year. One hundred and twenty thousand one hundred and twenty-two persons, or 17½ per cent. of the total, returned incomes of between $750 and $1500. Regarded relatively the greatest contributors to the income tax are persons whose incomes range from $2500 to $3500. No less than 13 per cent. of the total tax is paid by persons with $40,000 a year and upward.

It must be admitted that the income tax is as unpopular a form of taxation in Austria as it is in other countries. Many persons who do not occupy their own apartments evade payment altogether and thousands of others continue to pay upon assessments more or less below their real incomes. The law is, however, impartially and firmly administered, and there is no corruption of tax officials. Taxpayers dissatisfied with their annual assessment can appeal to a board of commissioners who endeavor to see that justice is done. Where the officials are unable to ascertain from a man's employers or elsewhere his exact income, they are guided largely by his scale of living and especially by the amount of rent he pays. In Vienna it is generally considered that rent represents one-fifth of a man's income.

The Beautiful

"REDONDO VILLA TRACT B"

The Beautiful

Only $90 Per Lot — $4 Down, $4 Per Month — No Interest, No Taxes

FREE ROUND TRIP TICKETS from Los Angeles to Redondo and return, on cars going every 20 minutes, are given away at our office absolutely free upon application. Also free automobile ride at Redondo.

Large level lots, 50x150 feet. Rich soil, pure water, fine climate. All lots, including corners, one price—$90 per lot—no more, no less. You know what you have to pay—$90 per lot—no higher. At Redondo over $2,000,000 has already been expended in grand and substantial improvements. The beautiful "Redondo Villa Tract B" is on the Camino Real (King's Highway) boulevard connecting Redondo with Los Angeles. We have just bought this beautiful tract for $151,000, and believing in the principle that it pays to let our customers make a profit, hence we have decided on this grand profit-sharing plan. We will make a profit and all our purshaers are guaranteed a profit of 25 per cent. within one year, as per our written agreement.

MR. H. E. HUNTINGTON IS EXPENDING OVER A MILLION DOLLARS AROUND REDONDO IN SUBSTANTIAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Go down to Redondo and see for yourself. At Jefferson street and Grand avenue see the immense stacks of heavy steel rails for the double-tracking of the present two electric lines of the Los Angeles and Redondo Railway Company. The rails are arriving daily. Dirt is now flying. Better buy now. Then there's the Los Angeles-Pacific Railway Co.'s electric line to Redondo, the broad-gauging of which will soon occur. And in addition to the above three electric lines now running to Redondo is the great Santa Fe steam railroad. With four lines of transportation it would seem as if same would be sufficient, but surveyors are in the field laying out the shortest line of all to connect Los Angeles with its choicest seashore suburb—Redondo. Mr. Huntington is now building at Redondo the largest electric power house on the Pacific Coast, to cost $1,250,000, as fast as men and money can do it. Go down and look at the mammoth cement smokestack.

A suburban electric railroad is now nearing completion at Redondo. The grand three-story business block of Mr. W. M. Garland at Redondo is just finished. Follow successful men like Mr. Huntington and Mr. Garland—they know that Redondo is substantial and a safe place to invest in. Buy anywhere around Redondo and you are sure to make large profits. Three commercial wharves. A safe harbor by twenty year's practical test. Redondo is permanent and has just begun to grow. Then again, returning to successful men, we notice that the following men have bought to the north of Redondo:

Mr. Edwin Chambers, the far-sighted General Freight Agent of the Santa Fe; Mr. George H. Peck, the successful banker of San Pedro; Mr. John J. Byrne, the capable General Passenger Agent of the Santa Fe, and Dan Murphy, the millionaire oil operator of Los Angeles. A word to the wise is sufficient! BUY!

Remember that your purchase is made with the distinct understanding that we will refund all money paid us, with 6 per cent. per annum interest added, if after visiting the "Redondo Villa Tract B" it is found that we have misrepresented our proposition in the slightest particular.

25 Per Cent Guaranteed Increase

For $4 down and $4 per month until paid for we will sell you a "Redondo Villa Tract B" lot for $90, subject to the following guarantee from us: If at the expiration of one year from purchase this $90 lot is not worth $112.50—or 25 per cent. increase—based on the price at which our corps of salesmen will then be selling similar lots, we will refund all of the money you have paid us, with 6 per cent. interest additional. If you should die at any time before payments have been completed we will give to your heirs a deed of the lot without further cost. If you should lose employment or be sick you will not forfeit the land, but as each written certificate of sickness or non-employment is received monthly your time for payment will be extended another month.

Our Restrictions

No saloons, no shanties, no factories. Purchasers are not compelled to build, but if they do then they must erect attractive looking houses, there being no "dollar limit." We leave it to each purchaser to build a pretty looking house, which must be neatly painted, as we know that for a moderate sum one can now build a very pretty bungalow. Lumber is cheap at Redondo, as there are three commercial wharves at Redondo at which lumber schooners are daily discharging their cargoes.

If Russell Sage, the multi-millionaire of New York, told you that you could make a fortune in suburban real estate (especially when it costs you only $4 down and $4 per month) wouldn't you be impressed? Well, listen! That's just what Mr. Sage did say in the New York World of September 28, 1902: "Young man, buy real estate, especially acre property in the outlying boroughs, and then work hard at your usual avocation. Your real estate purchases will make your old age comfortable."—Russell Sage.

Come One! Come All!!

Office open every night during week days from 7 to 9 p. m. to accommodate those who cannot come during the day.

LOSES HOUSE AND HUSBAND.

Irate Burbank Woman Makes Sensational Charge.

Says Ranch Home Was Burned for Sheer Spite.

Trouble With Mother-in-Law Basis of Dispute.

As the preliminary of a probable suit for divorce, Mrs. J. Ristelhueber of Burbank, is making sensational charges against her husband, who is now staying in Los Angeles at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Moquist, of No. 3308 Griffith avenue.

Mrs. Ristelhueber says her husband burned down her house, just for spite. She says he is now trying to get hold of money which belongs to her mother, Mrs. Diebold, and in which she has an interest, on claims that are absurd.

She says, of course, many other things which are more or less pertinent to the present troubles, but the most striking of her charges is that her husband burned down her house during her absence at one of the Burbank stores.

Yesterday Mrs. Ristelhueber was unburdening herself to the District Attorney; but it is probable there will be no official action taken. The divorce proceeding will likely bring to light details of the family squabble.

The Ristelhuebers about two years ago went from Los Angeles to Burbank and began country life on the ranch of Mrs. Diebold, mother of Mrs. Ristelhueber. But there were ructions between the three members of the household, one of the main points of contention being in regard to Ristelhueber's contention that he should get pay for the work he was putting in on the place in the way of erection of buildings, etc.

One day he suggested to Mrs. Diebold, who lived with the Ristelhuebers, that it wouldn't be more than right that she should give him a good slice of the money forthcoming when she sold the ranch. Mother-in-law demurred; she said that her daughter was closer to her than her son-in-law, and if anybody got money besides herself it would be her daughter. Then her daughter heard of the proposition and she, it is said, was emphatic in expressing her opinion of the attempt of her husband to get hold of the property.

One day both women went to Burbank to trade, and when they got back the house was in ashes. Just how Mrs. Ristelhueber is going to prove it a case of arson does not seem clear.

Six weeks ago the rupture in the Ristelhueber household became so open that the head of the house announced that he would strike out and make his living elsewhere.

Yesterday, in discussing the case, he said: "I considered that I had done enough on the ranch to at least entitle me to my board without any more labor, and so I told my mother-in-law that I didn't propose to work any more unless I got pay for it.

"At last I just picked up and left; I didn't take anything with me except my camera, and I even had to borrow money to come to Los Angeles—me that used to be so well fixed in the old country.

"Ach, Himmel, did she say that I burned down the house? Let her go ahead, and we'll see what the court will say.

"I was drilling a well, and wanted timbers for part of the construction. I wanted to keep them from rotting and so I got a can of tar to dip them in. The tar was stiff, so I lighted up the blue flame oil stove and set the can on to heat.

"Then the man who worked with me called me to the barn, and I went, forgetting all about the tar can. Whoof! came the noise and I cried out that something terrible had happened. Then we ran to the house and pulled out the blazing stove. I got my clothes burned and my hair and eyebrows scorched off in doing this.

"But just inside a thin board partition stood a five-gallon can of coal oil, and the fire got into that and in a moment every part of the house was in a blaze. I got a witness to prove all about it. August Boehme, a carpenter of this city, was there working with me."

Ristelhueber's irate spouse is his second wife. He has several grown children by his first marriage. They all support their father in his present difficulties.

Since the division of the ranch household, Ristelhueber has taken legal steps to collect a claim of $800 against his mother-in-law for labor performed on her ranch. He claims that he worked constantly for twenty months, besides putting in some of his own money.

Mr. Ristelhueber vigorously denies all the charges his wife makes, and the District Attorney does not take much stock in the story she tells.

CITY SCHOOL AFFAIRS.

Polytechnic Board of Control Officers and Members Elected—Week of Patriotic Celebrations.

Patriotic celebrations were the order in the public schools the past week, entertainments in honor of Washington's Birthday being the rule. At the new Macy-street school an elaborate programme was given on Thursday, the little kindergarten folk distinguishing themselves in a series of charming songs and rhythms under the direction of Miss Marcellus. Rev. Baker P. Lee was a guest and addressed the children, and Assistant Superintendent Bettinger spoke on "Patriotism." The girls' chorus of the school sang delightful numbers, and "Hansel and Gretel" from the fairy opera by Humperdinck, was beautifully rendered, the story being told by Miss Louise Buisseret, and the songs sung by a group of girls.

Officers and members of the Polytechnic Board of Control for the coming six months were elected as follows: Victor E. Hecht, president; Julia Murray, vice-president; Clement Rels, secretary, and Miss Bertha Sanborn of the faculty, treasurer. The class representatives for the board are: Lucy Smith, Howard Bixby, Len Washtel, Jack Clark, Ross Holmes, James Machnerny, Joe Henck, Joe Martin. Post-graduate class, Everett Charlton; faculty member, H. La V. Twining. Joe Hathaway is to be book-keeper for the board. The new board will have many large bills before it during the coming term, notably the fiesta, the laying out of the school grounds for athletic purposes and the establishment of a cooperative book store next September. The entertainment course for this term has several good attractions.

The students of Yale School gave a fine exhibition at their gymnasium, No. 209 North Union avenue, Friday evening. It was enjoyed by a large company of patrons and invited guests. The young athletes showed proficiency in rope climbing, high jumping, vaulting, bag punching, jig steps, on parallel bars and finally made themselves into human pyramids with the apex away up among the rafters of the ceiling. Prizes of silver cups were awarded, Master E. G. Chapman winning the first by a score of 19, and D. Phillips second with 18. The honorable inscription on the school cup was won by Master B. Lopez. The judges were Dr. F. J. Raven and L. K. Chase. A feature of the evening was the club swinging by Prof. Adams, head master of the school.

PEOPLE WHO WISH THEY HAD

taken our advice and bought Mohawk-Johnnie mining stock are now filled with vain regrets. Are you among them? Mohawk-Johnnie is now listed on the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board, and the closing quotations for the week just ended were 14c bid and 15c asked. We sold this stock at 10c per share and gave fair, full warning that it would prove a swift profit winner. Events have demonstrated that we knew whereof we spoke. At 14c per share a profit of 40 per cent. is available to the buyers of this stock at our advertised price, and as their investments were made, on an average, not more than one month ago, this is at the rate, approximately, of 480 per cent. per annum. But we do not advise selling at the offered price, despite the big gain it would yield. On the contrary, we advise all who own Mohawk-Johnnie stock to hold fast to the same and buy more, for we believe the stock will continue to climb until its market value is several times the price at which we sold it. There is nothing arbitrary or fictitious about the advance in the price of Mohawk-Johnnie; it is simply the result of a bona fide market demand, evidence of public recognition of the fundamental fact that the Mohawk-Johnnie Mining Company has some of the choicest holdings in one of the richest districts on the great Goldfield belt, and as development reveals the golden measures of those holdings the company's stock will be clamored for and forced upward in price. The Mohawk-Johnnie is now a producing company. It owns and operates two splendid leases on the famous Johnnie Consolidated property, Johnnie District, Nevada, and has piled up on its dumps a large quantity of high grade ore, some going as high as $1970 per ton, or nearly $1.00 per pound. Within ninety days a mill will be ready to reduce this ore and the large amount additional that will have been taken out in the meanwhile. The company also owns six splendid claims south of the Johnnie Consolidated property, the ore from which claims goes as high as $481 per ton in gold. Real mineral merit is back of Mohawk-Johnnie stock, as will be realized by any one who sees the specimens of rich ore from the company's holdings now open to inspection in our office. There is yet an opportunity for splendid profit in the stock, and we say to you buy Mohawk-Johnnie at market.

HIS STORY-TELLING WAY IS CURIOUS.

Besold, the Temescal Canyon Wife-Murderer, Shows Clumsy Cunning. Smiles as He Talks About His Santa Ana Marriage.

BY HARRY C. CARR.

Study of Besold, the Temescal Canyon wife-murderer, in his cell, yesterday. Drawn by Artist Dodge while the convicted man was retelling his clumsy story.

ANTON ORTER BESOLD, the Bavarian who will be sentenced tomorrow for having murdered his wife in Temescal Cañon—a most remarkable and hideous crime—has begun to talk to reporters.

The story that he kept back from the jury during his murder trial he is now eager to tell to the papers from his jail cell.

He says in one breath that his wife was haunted by mysterious enemies; that she was probably assaulted by chance sailors; that she committed suicide.

The squirming of any pilloried, tortured thing has a certain interest. So, although Besold's story is only a mass of inconsequential details, his manner of telling it is a study.

In many ways, he is a very curious person.

He's rather like a soldier and a little like a gambler. He has a certain clumsiness of evasion—a sort of directness in being indirect—typical of a regular army man. In another way he differs from the mental attitude of most soldiers.

The typical soldier builds up a story of laborious detail and flings it at you with a "believe-it-or-go-to-hell" manner. There is a sort of gambler's cunning about Besold. He tries to produce an effect upon your mind, which is a thing a soldier seldom does. A soldier blurts it out and—has done with it.

A very clever young man wrote in a newspaper about Besold that he has "a broad stupidity and a narrow keenness."

Lord Bacon might have been writing about Besold when he said "There be that can pack the cards, and yet cannot play well."

In talking with Besold, you always have the feeling that you are not talking to the real man who is somewhere behind the mask watching the effect of the spoken words.

Besold wouldn't see any one yesterday morning when we first went to jail. He said he wanted his attorney. Wherefore came Mr. Sturgis from his office—as chaperon.

The two of them—lawyer and client—were talking in the jail corridors when the reporters were finally admitted.

"I think that other hole was put in the skull afterward," Besold was saying emphatically to the attorney, as though they had been discussing the crushed condition of outraged justice—which they obviously hadn't. It was pure "stage business."

"What conclusion do you draw from the fact that the other hole was put in the skull afterward?" Besold was asked quickly.

Besold did not answer. He turned to his lawyer, who made a skillful, easy answer for him.

Every time any new phase came into the conversation, Besold turned questioningly to his lawyer before he uttered a syllable of reply. It was not in the manner of helpless appeal; but in the impersonal deference of a soldier with his officer.

HAS A BAD EAR.

Besold looks like a soldier. He walks like a soldier—120 springy steps to the minute. He cultivates the long, blonde, military mustache. He is a rather good-looking man, with remarkably luminous blue eyes that please women. But he has a bad ear. No man need waste time trying to be good with a bad ear. Every other mark of degeneration can be hidden—not a misshapen ear.

His lawyer giving him the signal, Besold started in a long recital of the last time he saw his wife—their parting. It was an astounding mass of details—what they had for breakfast, what she said and what he said, how they went to a doctor's office, which hadn't any windows, and where there were magazines—

It wasn't what would be called a rambling story. It was clogged with wearisome fine details. The point of it was that Cladie Besold left him and he didn't know what became of her.

"Why did she wish to leave you; what was the matter?" he was asked.

"She was a sport," he said, in the manner of a worldly wise man announcing an axiom. "They are all that way. They are always wanting to leave and always wanting to come back. She left me four times."

Besold told the story of his bigamous marriage to a second elderly bride, Mrs. Pickett, with a lurking smile of amusement, as though it had happened to some one else.

SANTA ANA MARRIAGE.

"She asked me one day to go down to Santa Ana with her to look at some property. While we were there she asked me if I didn't want a home. She said that she did.

"I told her it wouldn't be right for us to be just living together; it would make talk, so she said we could be married. When I told her I was a married man, she said it made no difference, as my wife would never come back to me."

Besold smiled and his eyes danced with amusement when he went on to tell how Mrs. Pickett was sensitive about her age, and they doctored up the marriage license to make her appear to be younger than he.

He dwelt with pious emphasis on the fact that his scruples against creating scandal made him commit bigamy.

"They say my wife, she never had enemies—"

He stopped quickly and looked at his lawyer. "Shall I tell that?"

"Yes; tell that," said Mr. Sturgis.

"There was a man once tried to poison her in Baltimore. He sent her poisoned candy. He followed—"

"My idea is that this unhappy woman may have been assaulted by sailors in that cañon and murdered," said Mr. Sturgis gracefully, turning Besold off.

Sturgis was surprised to learn yesterday from reporters that bent pins, twisted all out of shape, as though they had been torn from the woman's clothing, were found near the corpse, seeming to support his theory of assault.

Sturgis claims that he was not treated fairly by Attorney Thompson, who formerly defended Besold, and by others in the case. He claims the Sheriff's office withheld certain letters.

Besold said he was nagged into making damaging statements by Deputy Sheriff Gilbert on the way across the continent. "He just kept at me all day, from morning until night, until I would say anything. He wanted to know too much. He wanted to know how I made my money to go to Europe, and I told him I was a gambler; but I wasn't. I made all my money honestly." There was hardly any resentment in his manner of telling this.

SENSATION DOESN'T AFFECT.

A reportorial sensation was suddenly sprung upon Besold just before the interview closed.

It is a fact that never came into evidence that the dead woman was found to have been shot through the breast as well as the head. Owing to the stupid carelessness of the officials, the body was hustled into the grave without any examination at all.

This fact, which might change the whole complexion of the case, was suddenly told Besold yesterday. The man never batted an eye. His attorney expressed some surprise. Besold gave no sign of interest beyond watching his attorney's face for the next speech signal.

He went back to his cell in a most peculiar way.

It is curious to watch the average prisoner being led back to his cage. They almost invariably walk with a hesitating and uncertain step—like men not sure of their mental footing. This is probably due to the fact that most criminals—most murderers, anyhow—are unused to obedience and are bewildered by the loss of their free will to do as they please. Their attitude is of being driven.

The Edwards and Winters Company have sold over half a million dollars worth of Eagle Rock property since February, 1906. We have the best in Eagle Rock. THIS IS YOUR Last chance to share in the sure profits that are going to be made by the Delaware & Lackawana Steel Company, with a plant at Oxford, N. J., which controls a new process for making steel that reduces the cost exactly one-fifth over the methods now employed by other similar companies operating in the United States and other countries, for that matter.

Competent steel men, and old-time investors, say there is positively no limit whatever to the amount of dividends this company should pay the stockholders with such an extremely low capitalization of $200,000. As further evidence that the investing public appreciates its opportunity to get in on an enterprise with such extremely promising prospects, we have sold more than 10,000 shares of this stock in and around Los Angeles within the last 30 days and they have all been paid for in cash.

When we first took up the sale of these steel securities, we had only 5000 shares to sell. We disposed of these so readily that the company responded to our telegraph for more stock with an additional allotment of 10,000 shares, but with no particular length of time in which to sell them. We now have a trifle over 4000 of the last allotment left for sale, but they will all have to be disposed of by March 1. On that date, or as near to it as the company can now tell, the first wheel will be turned in the big foundry, and a day or two thereafter one of the big $20,000 steel converters will be at work making steel for which there is an ever-increasing demand.

Have you ever bought stock of a company who was going to build a plant, or who was going to do this, or that, or something else, before the company paid dividends? Didn't you wait and wait, and maybe you are waiting yet for the completion of the plant and the payment of dividends.

If you are tired of waiting, tired of living on promises, and want to get in on a substantial steel enterprise, the products for which there is a demand the world over, this is your chance.

The Delaware & Lackawana Steel Company is composed of men who do things—men who haven't the time to sit around and make promises about what they are going to do, but who do things and have their friends or pleased stockholders to tell about what they have done. When they get through with one thing they start on another. It might be truthfully said that not one minute's time has been lost by the officers and directors of this steel company from the time it was incorporated up until now, when the plant is almost ready for operation.

An immense foundry, machine shops, etc., situated on 4½ acres of land, has been acquired at Oxford, N. J., only 71 miles from New York City, and about 1-4 mile from some of the biggest iron mines in the world. Immediately thereafter the contract was let, and a big force of men went immediately to the work of preparing the plant for occupancy. Two immense $20,000 steel converters were ordered built. One of them has already been completed and is now installed in the company's plant ready for operation. The other will follow the first within a few days.

If you want in on something good, something quick, and something that is sure to be a money-earner from the start, this is your chance. We will continue to take orders of from 25 to 1000 shares to the extent of our remaining allotment of this stock up until the evening of March 1. After that date there will be no more for sale, at least not through our firm, at any price. If you are enabled to get any at all it will be through some private individual, who will undoubtedly ask a big bonus for the stock of a steel company that is at that date earning money.

Remember, now, the evening of March 1, is the last date on which you can buy this stock, and if you want in on this steel company you will have to wire, mail or bring your order in before that date.

ASSOCIATED BACKS DOWN.

Combine Declines to Furnish Gas Company Oil.

Contract With Four Years to Run Repudiated.

Suit for Damages Expected. Price Very Low.

Oil circles have a sensation. A stir has been caused by the news circulated for some days, and which The Times is now able to confirm fully, that the Associated-Amalgamated combine has repudiated its contract with the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company, and that the latter corporation, now forced to buy its oil at a heavy advance, will, unless the combine makes a settlement, bring suit for heavy damages.

The facts are as these: Just before the purchase of the Salt Lake properties and the organization of the Amalgamated, the Associated, in September, 1904, contracted to deliver to the gas company approximately 300,000 barrels yearly until 1910 for making gas and for fuel. The price is generally supposed to have been between 40 and 45 cents, a low figure even then, and less than half what is paid for oil in some cases now. By those well informed as to conditions, it was predicted that the contract was most advantageous to the consumer, but rather likely to be hard for the Associated. After the Amalgamated deal was closed the oil was furnished from the Salt Lake wells.

After some time the gas company, finding itself in need of an additional supply, began buying from the Union, but without ceasing to take from the Associated the amount for which it had contracted. Just how long this has been going on is not publicly stated, but as much as a year ago, when complaint of the quality of the gas produced from the sulphur-bearing oil was quite general, it was reported that Whittier oil had been purchased from independent companies. So far as the public ever heard, the Associated then made no objection, and the gas company continue to take the Salt Lake and use it. Now, however, when the price has gone up, the combine comes forth with a repudiation of its contract on the alleged ground that under its provisions the gas company is debarred from buying oil from any other company, and that as this prohibition has been violated, the contract has become null and void.

"MUM" IS THE WORD.

Both parties to the controversy object to talking about it in any way. In fact, the silence of the grave is maintained at the offices of the Associated-Amalgamated combine in the Pacific Electric building. "Mum" is the word with every one from general manager to office boy when the troubles with the gas company are broached. The only word obtainable yesterday as to the cause of the action was a remark by one official that "under some conditions the contract might become invalid."

The direct question was asked, as follows:

"Among oil men the report is that the reason for this action is that you are short of oil to fill the contract. Is this a fact?"

Each time this was put it brought forth the only answer given to any question bearing upon the contract. "No, that has nothing to do with it. We have plenty of oil," said each official asked.

SHORTAGE BELIEVED BY ALL.

Whatever may be said, not a man interested in oil can be found outside of the combine's officials and employés but declares unhesitatingly his belief that shortage and high price of oil are the real reasons. As grounds for this belief they point to the appalling decline in the output of Kern River, where the Associated's chief properties are located, from 17,500,000 in 1904 to less than 12,000,000 in 1906; the steady decline of production on the Amalgamated, once as high as 10,000 barrels a day, according to General Manager Porter, now certainly less than half this amount; the utter failure to date of the Recruit to bring in a single barrel of oil, and the enormous increase in the price of independent oil at the wells throughout the entire State.

Were the Associated obliged to buy oil anywhere except in Kern or Coalinga the price at the well would be more than what it would receive from the gas company. At Kern and Coalinga the margin of profit would be less than 25 cents, without making the slightest allowance for transportation charges, which would make the price greater than the figure in the contract. The feverish haste with which the combine is drilling at Coalinga, where, by the way, it is believed to have every prospect, almost certainty, in fact, of success, and its "wild-catting" at Arroyo Grande, go to show the demand it has for every barrel it can produce.

The effect of the public announcement of this latest development upon the oil market is likely to be a stiffening of prices in the fields throughout the State. The Union is now furnishing the gas company's oil, most of which is supposed to come from Whittier, Fullerton and Santa Maria. The price is not made public, but it is much higher than the Associated's. The report that the Union had taken over the contract at the same figure is authoritatively denied.

Just when the gas company will take its troubles to court is not definitely known, but it will probably not be until a stiff amount of damages has accumulated.

GREENWATER-ELY CONSOLIDATED COPPER COMPANY

Every Dollar Subscribed Helps Sink the Shaft at Ely

The GREENWATER-ELY COPPER COMPANY is doing just what it promised to do. It is putting every dollar into developing the claims at Ely as fast as subscribed. Our president, S. M. Mingus, himself one of the largest stockholders, is giving the mining his personal attention, so that every penny may be expended wisely and economically for the best interests of us all.

President Mingus writes us that his shaft is down 50 feet, and that within the next 50 feet he expects to strike paying ore.

Two Chances For Fortune

ONE OF THE BEST MINING INVESTMENTS which can be recommended to an investor is a company which owns more than one property—preferrably property in separate and distinct camps. The one proposition seconds and safeguards the other. There is a reserve line to fall back upon.—[Los Angeles Express, Jan. 5.

This commended feature is distinctive of the GREENWATER-ELY CONSOLIDATED MINING COMPANY, owning groups in two of the most promising copper districts that have lately been discovered. If one group does not show up a winner, the other almost certainly will.

Development has already begun on the Ely group by sinking a shaft 100 feet deep. Development upon the Greenwater group will follow as soon as the funds required are derived from the sale of Treasury stock at

Profits in Copper Mining

At three cents a share everybody can afford to invest a few dollars in copper. The greatest mining fortunes of the past few years have been made in copper, because of the enormous dividends returned at the present high price of copper. Of the seven biggest dividend paying mines in the United States six are copper mines.

The new Ely district promises to add more copper to the world's production than any equal mining area ever opened up. There is enough copper ore exposed or known to exist within Ely's recognized ore zone to keep smelters and concentrating plants of thousands of tons daily capacity in continual operation beyond the life of the present generation. There are blocked out in two groups alone over 60,000,000 tons of copper ore, and these groups embrace only a fraction of the mineral belt. It is in this new copper district that the Guggenheims are erecting a $10,000,000 smelter with the enormous capacity of 10,000 tons a day.

This copper district is much farther advanced than Greenwater, for the reason that it had been developed as a gold and silver district years ago. The presence of copper was then unsuspected. There is no trace of copper on the surface, but it has been found in prodigious quantities at depths varying from 100 to 450 feet. In the opinion of experts the underlying deposit of copper at Ely is practically inexhaustible. Besides the Guggenheims' great property a number of other heavy producers have been developed, and the list of favorable prospects is a large and growing one.

In the East, where they still look upon Goldfield and Tonopah as mushroom mining camps, more given to pugilism than to bullion, they still deny Ely and Greenwater a place upon their maps, and the Eastern papers insist that an investor in mining is a fool. The investors of the West know that mining propositions which are legitimate are bigger profit-makers than real estate or money lending.

Have you given any thought to the wonderful stories of copper and the fabulous fortunes that are being made in Nevada and California? Have you sometimes wished that you might have a share in the opportunities and the profits? Or did you think that they were reserved for the already rich? We invite you to come in with us, for even a LITTLE MONEY INVESTED NOW may bring you splendid income in time to come. HAVE FAITH IN US. WE ARE KEEPING FAITH WITH YOU. FAITH AND WORKS SHALL TRIUMPH!

OUR TWO GROUPS

This company owns outright seven claims, four known as the Rockefeller group in Ely, just north of the Nevada-Northern mines, and almost completely encircled by a ring of proven copper properties; the other claims are known as the Old Camp group, and are situated on Willow Creek, about 8 miles southwest of Greenwater camp.

Lately a neighboring property on Willow Creek changed hands for $25,000. The stockholders of the GREENWATER-ELY CONSOLIDATED COPPER COMPANY believe that their claims are fully as valuable a prospect—which is all any of the properties in Greenwater are at this writing—prospects, for none of them is a mine shipping ore. We can sell our Greenwater property—if we desire—just as it is, but we are satisfied to hold it while we develop the Ely group. Greenwater has no railroad yet to take out ore after it is mined, while Ely has. Greenwater in time will have both railroads and smelters, but Ely beats Greenwater to them both.

Until the discovery of Greenwater's copper deposits, undoubtedly the Ely copper field was the most marvelous mining discovery of this century. No one knows yet the extent of the Greenwater deposit, but the reports of experts in copper have been so enthusiastic that $20,000,000 has been invested in mining property in the Greenwater district, and the men who have invested the bulk of that money are the Copper Kings of the world. Under such leadership it is safe to follow.

We offer you non-assessable Treasury Stock in a company possessing three splendid claims in Greenwater and four claims in the heart of Ely at the floor price of 3 cents a share. Only a few shares are left at that price. If you want them or any part of them you MUST ORDER AT ONCE.

REGULAR FEE, $2, $3 AND $5.
ALL READINGS REDUCED THIS WEEK.
I CALL YOU BY FULL NAME.
I possess the SECRET POWER of reconstructing unhappy domestic affairs and making the home happy, of gaining the one you wish in marriage, of making the ONE YOU LOVE ALONE AND DEVOTED, of overcoming rivals, gives you the SECRET POWER OF INFLUENCING PEOPLE WITHOUT THEIR KNOWLEDGE OF DOING YOUR EVERY WISH, OF OVERCOMING ENEMIES AND PLACING YOU IN A PLACE OF POWER AND INFLUENCE.
ST. ELMO.
THE ACKNOWLEDGED ADEPT AND RECOGNIZED AUTHORITY OF HINDOO PHILOSOPHY AND OCCULT MYSTERIES MAKES A REMARKABLE STATEMENT: "YOUR GREATEST WISH CAN BE REALIZED—YOU WOULD NOT DESIRE A THING IF YOU WERE NOT CAPABLE OF ATTAINING IT."
I KNOW HOW TO CONTROL AND USE THAT POWER FOR YOUR SUCCESS AND MINE. IF YOU WISH TO SUCCEED IN ANY BUSINESS UNDERTAKING, CONSULT ME. I can put you on the right road. If you desire to win in love, or be reunited with one from whom some trouble or estrangement separates you, I CAN AND WILL HELP YOU TO GAIN THE DESIRE OF YOUR HEART. Are you tired of being poor and living a "from-hand-to-mouth" existence? If so, COME TO ME AND I WILL SHOW YOU A BETTER WAY. Life is not half so much of a mystery as some people would have you believe. If you had studied more in Nature's laws and learned the lessons therein revealed you would know better WHY SOME PEOPLE SUCCEED AND OTHERS FAIL. There is a good reason just the same as THERE IS A REASON why water will run down hill more easily than it will run up hill. I CAN EXPLAIN THAT REASON to you. I AM SUCCESSFUL. MYSELF. I do not make this claim in the spirit of a braggart or egotist, but to enable you to appreciate what I can do for you.
MY EXTENSIVE PATRONAGE AND GREAT SUCCESS ARE THE ENVY OF ALL COMPETITORS. I AM NEVER IDLE. MY MOTTO IS—"WORK AND WIN." I HELP MY PATRONS TO SUCCEED IN ATTAINING THEIR VARIOUS AMBITIONS. THAT IS WHY I HAVE SO MANY OF THEM, AND WHY EACH ONE RECOMMENDS ME TO THEIR FRIENDS.
The All-wise Creator did not endow you with high ideas, noble inspirations, desire for happiness and return for that great love craving within your heart without at the same time placing within your reach the means of attaining these desires. If you are in trouble of any kind or not satisfied with your condition in life, come to me and I will make this clear to you. I have helped others. I CAN HELP YOU. Positively NO CHARGE if I fail to TELL YOUR NAME IN FULL, your occupation, what you called for, whom and when you will marry, anything you wish to know.

PROFESSOR SHELDON,
THE WORLD'S GREATEST PSYCHIC.
PERMANENTLY LOCATED IN HIS HOME OFFICE, IN THE WINDHAM, 109½
SOUTH BROADWAY.
READ CAREFULLY.
AN HONEST PROPOSITION.
NO FEE IN ADVANCE.
IT IS JUST AS CHEAP TO SEE THE BEST.
REMEMBER THE NAME—
SHELDON,
THE NAME SHELDON
A DOUBLE GUARANTEE.
MAN OF PSYCHIC GIFT POWER IS SHELDON.

The most critical test that one who practices a profession must submit to is the crucial test of time. No business that is ever so slightly tinged with fakirism or doubt can withstand the development of time and the interchange of ideas among those who consult, investigate and pass judgment. Professor Sheldon has been in California eighteen years. He has been consulted by thousands. The best evidence of his wonderful power is the testimony of his large clientele, who come from every walk in life; secondary to this is the true and brilliant work of eighteen years of restless activity and without exciting the hostility or failing to secure the admiration of every person who has consulted him. A man should be judged by his works, and so he is. Prof. Sheldon has been tried. He has met every expectation, every advertised promised, and his reputation is established.
I hereby solemnly agree and guarantee to make no charge if I fail to call you by name in full, names of your friends, enemies or rivals. I promise to tell you whether your husband, wife or sweetheart is true or false, tell you how to gain the love of the one you most desire, even though miles away. How to succeed in business, speculation, law-suits; how to marry the one I choose? How can I marry well? How soon can I marry? How can I conquer my rival? How can I make any one love me? How soon will my love propose? How can I get a letter? How can I get a good position? How can I remove bad influences? How can I control any one? How make distant ones think of me? How can I reconcile differences? How can I hold my husband's love? How can I keep my wife's love? Sheldon never asks questions.
STANDING CHALLENGE.
$5000—FOR HIS EQUAL—$5000.
SHELDON
has been a native of California for the last eighteen years and is legally ordained to one of the oldest spiritualist societies in the world.
My only reason for calling you by name and what you called for—I do this incidentally as a chain to read by.
He will tell you frankly your condition and what you may expect; if nothing can be done for you he will not take one cent of your money. Has not this honesty on the face of it?
The following list shows purely and simply that Sheldon has been consulted by the most popular and most noted men and women of the world, and his reading of their lives was pronounced most wonderful—Julia Marlowe, Sarah Bernhardt, Helen Gould, Hon. C. H. Harrison, President McKinley, President Harrison, Grover Cleveland, Senator Depew, Senator Hanna, Senator Foraker, Senator Spooner.
No man has ever been consulted in more notable affairs than he. In Europe and America he has advised thousands in various walks of life, and always to their advantage.
Sheldon stands alone, possessing a force, a power, a gift—call what you will—that none can explain, none can account for.
During the past ten months he has brought around through this wonderful power of personal control, 721 marriages, 142 separations, without any after trouble, came by the mutual consent of opposing parties; located 15 buried treasures; located 19 wills and 11 deeds; success in gaining $10 pensions; reunited 125 separated; have helped 182 investors; there have been 12 cases of such private nature I do not feel like classifying; in fact, it suffices to only say there is no heart so sad or wish too great that your hopes cannot be speedily realized by the force of this wonderful power.
He can relieve your anxiety, care, embarrassment, can astonish, guide, comfort, cheer and strengthen you.
Make no change in business, do not buy or sell a rooming-house, do not buy mining stock, do not buy a lot, a farm, a ranch, or make a lease without first seeing Sheldon. He will advise you to your advantage. He asks no questions.
SUCCESS AWAITS YOU.
OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS AT YOUR DOOR.
WILL YOU ANSWER?
BEWARE
of pretenders and partially developed mediums. They copy his advertisements and in many smaller cities use his name. Please remember, Professor Sheldon can be seen only at his home office, in the Windham, 109½ S. Broadway.
My practice and professional reputation are built upon "honor," reasonable charges, fair dealings, faithful service and speedy success for my clients. I have won for me the largest practice in the State of California. My superior knowledge and power, give me advantages which I warrant no one guaranteeing safer, surer and more rapid results than can be obtained elsewhere.

MY MAGAZINE, INVESTING FOR PROFIT.

Which I send free, is worth $10 a copy to any man who intends to invest any money, however small, who has money invested unprofitably, or who can save $5 or more per month, but who hasn't learned the art of investing for profit.

It demonstrates the real earning power of money, the knowledge financiers and bankers hide from the masses.

It shows how to invest small sums and how to make them grow ito fortunes, the actual possibilities of intelligent investments.

It reveals the enormous profits bankers make and shows how one can make the same profits safely.

It explains how stupendous fortunes are made and why they are made, how $1000 grows to $12,000.

To introduce my magazine, write me now, mention this paper, and I'll send it six months free.

FOR SALE—

THOUSANDS ARE GETTING RICH IN THE MAIL ORDER BUSINESS. WHY NOT YOU?

I have unquestionably one of the best mail order propositions ever brought out; all it needs is a little capital and push.

It is a dollar article, with a profit of several hundred per cent., and several thousand have already been sold right here, establishing beyond question its utility and salability.

The entire proposition goes for $5000, including enough stock to pay for it twice over, and you have the patent covering the entire United States.

Besides being a high-class mail order business, it is an ideal agents' proposition as well, and handled through either or both channels it should afford a short road to fortune.

You ask why such a good thing is for sale? Here's the answer in a nut shell; Inventors are not as a rule business men or financiers, and invariably allow the most valuable inventions to get away from them; I will convince you that that is the case in this instance.

If you feel that you will recognize a good thing when you see it, investigate this.

FOR SALE—

We offer for sale 100 shares of treasury stock in a land development syndicate, the profits of which will be enormous; the present value of the holdings of the company is $250,000. On this basis each share is worth $300. This block for further development is offered at $125 per share. No surer, safer or better investment can be found. The company is composed of conservative, reputable Los Angeles business men, whose names are a guarantee of success. The enterprise is already a winner. We invite the investigation of cautious investors. It is not likely that any more stock will be offered for sale, as the expenditure of $10,000 to $12,000 additional in improvements will be sufficient to place the property on the market. You can buy one or more shares, but we urge you to act quickly.

In Manhattan the falling off was 75 per cent., and in the Bronx 28 per cent. Philadelphia showed a drop of 43 per cent. In Los Angeles the falling off in building was close to $400,000, or 28 per cent. less this year than last.

Promise for the Future.

At home here the outlook for the future is not bad. There has been some disposition to slack up a little purposely. The great strike at San Pedro on the lumber vessels last fall resulted in a general depletion of stocks of lumber on the wharves and in the lumber yards all over this section of the country. Lately the deliveries of lumber have been very large and general in their nature. The yards are again very well stocked up and there is no shortage of lumber of any class. On account of this shortage prevailing for two or three months, builders have been disposed to confine their operations mostly to the work in hand. They have desired to get a number of large undertakings well out of the way before putting work upon the market. A good many of these large buildings are now nearly finished and the architects report plenty of work, a good deal of it of a very heavy nature, in view for the immediate future. Some of the architects are also busy planning residences of great magnificence for some of the suburban districts and also for inside of the city. The spring and summer promise to show a good deal of activity again in the building line.

THE PROPOSED HOTEL REDBURN, MODERN HOSTELRY FOR MONROVIA.

HOTEL REDBURN, MONROVIA.

Built on the bluff, northeast of the beautiful town of Monrovia, the site selected for the new Hotel Redburn is perhaps uncomparable with any other in Southern California. From the bluff can be had an unsurpassed view of the mountains on one hand and the gently rolling stretches of the fertile valleys on the other.

The Times, in this issue, prints for the first time an authentic picture of the proposed structure on which W. B. Redburn of Long Beach and his associates soon will begin work. While the plans have not been definitely decided, the vote taken at a recent meeting of the people interested was in favor of the design here shown.

Ridgeway & Metcalf of Long Beach are the architects. The building will be a five-story brick and steel structure of the type known as Class A. It will cost in the neighborhood of $300,000 to build, and when completed, furnishings, landscape gardening done and other necessary matters put in, the cost may reach half a million.

The dimensions, over all, are to be 165x245 feet. A broad terrace will encircle the structure and will be fully 800 feet in length, providing a fine promenade for the guests.

The main front entrance will open into a grand rotunda, 79x48 feet in size and twenty feet high. On either side will be a lounging room, one for ladies and one for gentlemen. These rooms will measure 19x50 feet. A reading-room 26x56 feet, private offices, telephone booths and a baggage room will be on this floor also. In the east wing there will be twenty-one guest rooms, while in the west wing will be a music hall 48x54 feet in size, with a stage 24x34. Two public elevators and an elevator for baggage and employés will be installed. Winding stairs will twine around these elevator shafts, while a grand stairway will lead from the first to the second floors. A feature will be the mezzanine floor, which will provide for two floors of guest rooms in the east wing. In this intermediate floor there will also be a gallery running out over the rotunda, and a gallery for the music room.

Each of the upper floors, except the top, will contain a large parlor, 22x34 feet. The guest rooms will be large and will number 200.

The top floor will contain the dining-room. This arrangement will afford a magnificent view, including, on a bright, clear day, both the mountains and the sea. The dining-room will be fifty-two feet wide, 100 feet long and twenty feet high. The room will be entirely enclosed by glass walls. A childrens dining-room, a breakfast-room and a private dining-room will be features. There will be choice guest rooms in the west wing on this floor, and also a roof garden. At the other end will be a spacious serving-room, kitchen and store-rooms.

Other features are the bowling alleys and the billiard rooms planned for the basement. The court and driveways in the rear, the driveways and porte cochere in front, and the elevator which will carry guests or visitors up to the hotel from the base of the bluff.

FOUR THOUSAND A FRONT FOOT.

SYNDICATE PAYS THAT FOR BROADWAY FRONTAGE.

Two Hundred and Sixty Thousand for Lot South of Sixth—Highest Price for Inside Lot on Street. May Erect Big Building—Seller Makes Handsome Profit.

The record sale of the week, and in fact of the year, was that of a lot on the east side of Broadway, between Sixth and Seventh streets, which was purchased by a syndicate composed of many well known local investors, for $260,000. The lot is the north 62½ feet of the Hotel Columbia property and is 155 feet deep to a twenty foot alley, which is paved, making the value of the property that much greater. The price was at the rate of $4190 a front foot, and is a record for that section. The property is known as Nos. 612, 614, 616 and 618 South Broadway.

The seller is Florence B. Cranton, who sold to a syndicate formed through the agencies of R. A. Rowan and Company, and W. B. Merwin and Company. The purchase is said to have been made as an investment, but it is possible that a large building will be erected as the present Hotel Columbia building, a two-story brick affair, was put up with heavy foundations, capable of sustaining the weight of a five-story structure. The rent of the property is said to pay a good percentage on the amount invested. Eight months ago the grantor purchased the property for $200,000, thus turning a handsome profit in the time elapsing between its purchase and resale. The price paid is considered a conservative estimate of the value of property in that section.

BUY SITE FOR CLUBHOUSE.

Ladies of Friday Morning Club Decide on Northwest Corner of Adams and Hoover.

After much consultation the site for the new clubhouse for the Friday Morning Club has been decided upon, and the property has been transferred to the club. The northeast corner of Adams street and Hoover street was bought last week for $30,000, despite the assertion that the property could not be had for less than $36,000. W. G. Kerckhoff sold the corner through the agency of Bryan & Bradford. The dimensions of the lot are rather irregular. There is a frontage of 184 feet on Adams and of 250 feet each on Hoover and Toberman streets, while the rear measures 310 feet. The lot is one of the most beautifully planted of any in Los Angeles. Great trees of twenty years' growth embower the grounds and will make the future home of the Friday Morning Club most attractive.

LONG BEACH RESIDENCE.

Located in the center of a plot of ground 225x250 feet in size, at Ocean Park avenue and Alamitos Park, Long Beach, the home soon to be erected for A. D. Myers of that town will be one of the seaside show places if the designs of the architects, Shattuck & Brown, are followed.

As the illustration on this page shows, the house will be a two-story and a half affair of the most modern residence design. White sandstone and red tile will be used in building the exterior. The dimensions over all will be 41x90 feet. There will be a sixteen-foot veranda circling the house, exclusive of the above measurements. The first floor will contain reception hall and drawing, driving, dining and breakfast rooms, a den, pantry and kitchen. There will be five bedrooms on the second floor, each with a private bath and sitting-room, en suite. There will also be a sewing-room and a trunk storage room on this floor. In the attic, provision has been made for a large billiard room and two servants' rooms. There will be a basement, containing boiler, coal, laundry and servants' rooms.

The interior finish in the drawing-room will consist of white and gold in the Louis XVI style, the driving-room in English, dining-room in mahogany, reception hall, den and breakfast rooms in white oak. Mahogany also will be employed in finishing the guests' rooms, birdseye maple and white enamel will be used in the others.

A heating plant will be a feature. Every modern appliance will be installed in the building. The approximate cost will be $40,000. To the rear is a sunken garden with a pergola leading down handsome cement stairs to the beach.

SYNDICATE BUYS ON HILL.

Lot Opposite Hamburger's Store Changes Hands at Good Figure.

One big deal was put through on South Hill street this week. The property known as Nos. 839 and 841 South Hill was sold for $150,000 by Mary J. McMenomy to a local syndicate The sale was engineered from the office of the Wright & Callender Company. The property consists of two lots with a total frontage of 67 feet on Hill street, having a depth of 165 feet. The location is exceptionally good, as it is directly opposite the Hamburger store building, now in process of construction. Two frame buildings at present occupy the land, but it is said that the value of these did not enter into the consideration, which was at the rate of $2500 a front foot.

INVEST ON WEST SEVENTH.

Sales on Great Cross-Town Thoroughfare Total Hundred and Twenty Thousand This Week.

Three good-sized transfers of property on West Seventh street were made during the week just passed. The frontage involved in the transactions totaled 298 feet, and the average price per foot figured about $435. The total amount of money involved was an even $120,000.

Mrs. Sarah H. Van Nuys has purchased from William Louden, of Indiana, the northeast corner of Seventh and Witmer streets, improved with a two-story and basement building known as the Netherland Hotel, fronting 108 feet on Seventh street and 120 feet on Witmer, for $55,000 cash. The purchase was made as an investment. This property was bought by Mr. Louden twelve months ago for $35,000. R. A. Rowan & Co. and W. B. Merwin & Co. negotiated the sale.

Dr. Karl Kurtz has purchased from a local investor the premises, No. 1135 West Seventh street, size 60x149 feet, to alley, with nominal improvements, for $20,000. Considering that transfers aggregating $350,000 have been made in this block recently, and that it is proposed to extend both Lucas and Bixel streets through to Eighth street immediately, the price paid is very reasonable. R. A. Rowan & Co. and F. M. Phelps & Co. acted as agents.

F. T. Fay, president of the Fay Fruit Company, has concluded a deal conveying to Joseph Burkhart the ownership of the property on the southeast corner of West Seventh street and Union avenue, lot 130x150 feet, with a two-story frame residence on the rear of the lot. The consideration, while not definitely stated by Mr. Fay, is thought to be about $45,000. The consideration figures at the rate of $300 a front foot.

ELIMINATE SIGN BOARDS.

Unique Move Made by Black Brothers Against the Eyesores—Have Less Than Twenty-five Today.

Almost alone among the realty men of Los Angeles in their move against the signboard nuisance are the firm of Black Bros. Wholly independent of the recent action of the Los Angeles Realty Board, this firm has been reducing the number of its signboards until at the time of writing, there are less than twenty-five bearing its name in the city. Two years ago the company has fully 200 signboards in various parts of the city. The number had increased to 300 by eighteen months ago. Then they decided that the signboards were of almost no help in selling the properties on which they were displayed, and in some cases were a great hindrance to the consummation of a deal. The firm then began the removal of the displays as fast as they could induce their clients to consent and are now confining themselves exclusively to newspaper advertising.

THEATER BUILDING ASSURED.

No Doubt Now That Hamburgers Will Erect Structure—To Be of Reinforced Concrete.

The Hamburger Theater, which has been in "statu quo" for many weeks, soon will be a concrete fact, as the question arising over the money has been settled and work will be begun as soon as the land is cleared of the building now there. The cost will approximate $300,000, exclusive of the cost of the land, which the Hamburger Realty and Trust Company owns and advances as part of its investment. It has been erroneously reported that the new building will adjoin the great Hamburger store building, now in course of construction on Broadway and Eighth streets, but this is not so, as fully 100 feet separate the lot from the department store. The theater will be known as the Hamburger Theater. The main construction will be of reinforced concrete. It will be eight stories high, the facade being very similar to that of the new store building. Every modern device to make the building absolutely safe will be installed. The seating capacity of the auditorium will be about 1800. There will be two large storerooms on the first floor, the remainder of the building will be occupied with offices. Mr. Morosco is to lease the entire structure from the Hamburger Realty Company, upon completion, and he will attend to the renting of offices. M. A. Hamburger stated yesterday that these arrangements have been made.

ON HILL AND FLOWER STREETS.

Schumacher-Wilson Realty Company Buys Two Pieces for Hundred Seventy-seven Thousand.

The Schumacher-Wilson Realty Company reports the purchase from the German Lutheran Church of the northwest corner of Flower and Eighth streets for $115,000. The lot has a frontage of 165 feet on Eighth street and 120 feet on Flower street. The rate paid figures about $960 per foot for the Flower street frontage. The improvements on this piece of property consist of a two-story frame church building of antiquated design, which occupies most of the land. On the rear is a one-story frame building, used as a Catholic school. This was bought for speculation.

The same company reports that it has bought from Mrs. J. A. Gless a lot on the west side of Hill street, 375 feet south of Eleventh street, lot 51x165 feet, for $62,000. The rate was $1200 a front foot. The lot is vacant, and was bought for a speculation.

DEALS HERE AND THERE.

John D. Foster & Co. report that they have sold for E. Melville to J. G. Schaefer the property at the southeast corner of Sixteenth and Hope streets. The property sold has a frontage of forty-eight feet on Sixteenth street and 120 feet on Hope street. The improvements consist of two-story apartments. The purchase price was $27,000. The same firm also reports the sale for the South Pasadena Realty and Improvement Company to G. Lawrence Stimson of the northern half of Oaklawn for about $60,000 cash. They also report that their sale of the corner of Eighteenth and Figueroa streets for the Friday Morning Club was to William Garland. The same firm also reports the sale for Mrs. Anna Fay Leeds to John Brockman of seventy-five feet on the south side of Twenty-eighth street, between Hoover and Key West streets, the purchase price being $7000.

ALONG SAN PEDRO STREET.

Wolcott & Overton report the sale of three lots on South San Pedro street, west side of the thoroughfare, between the Southern Pacific tracks and Thirty-first street, three lots with a total frontage of about 146 feet on San Pedro street and 150 feet on the tracks and on Thirty-first street, for a total of $18,800. Martha Flynn sold to Amelia Selbert. The property is considered a remarkably good buy, as there is plenty of room for a large warehouse, with facilities for shipping right on the railroad.

The same firm reports the sale of several other pieces of property in that vicinity: For Jeannette Sage to J. H. Wilmans, a six-room bungalow, No. 748 East Thirty-first street, $3000. For Ella H. Myers to Green & Keys, an alley corner 40x150 feet, with store and California house, for $5500.

STILL BUYING ON FLOWER.

Flower-street property continues to change hands actively. The last transfer to be reported from that high-class residence section is the property at No. 1327 South Flower, a two-story frame house on a lot 50x155 feet, to a twenty-foot alley. H. G. Chilson, manager of the Sun Drug Company, sold to Mr. Shanks for $15,500. The value of the improvements does not cut any figure in the purchase price, although the house is said to rent for a fair amount.

OLIVE STREET LOT SOLD.

W. H. Clune has sold to a local syndicate, through the agency of F. J. Jarvis & Co., for $57,000, lot 60x165 feet, at Nos. 937 and 939 South Olive street. Property contains old residence building, which rents for $70 per month. At prevailing prices in this section the above buy is considered a bargain. Property on the same street one block south is held at $900 a foot. This was bought at about $820 per foot.

EAST OF MAIN STREET.

Robert Hale has purchased of Fosgate & Reese the property at No. 1011 Maple avenue, 50x140 feet to an alley, consideration $9500. Mr. Hale has acquired the property as an investment and has not decided whether he will improve it.

IN THE PROFIT BELT.

Ever hear of anybody losing money who invested within a block or two of Moneta ave.? Ever hear of anyone who didn't make a big profit?

Guess not.

Moneta ave. is a money maker—a wealth creator—a profit producer.

Put there's such a thing as paying too much for a lot or going too far out, even in this favored district. And that's no "knock."

You'll strike it just about right if you invest in PECKHAM'S MONETA AVE. SQUARE.

Lots now selling as low as $500, and on easy terms if you desire.

If Moneta ave. alone is not good enough there's famous Figueroa to the west and Main street, Boulevard to the east.

Lots are all above grade in this tract. Improvements are nearing completion on this magnificent tract. Oiled streets, cement walks and curbs, fine water supply. There's some fine choice lots left. Better call. We'll be glad to take you out. Doesn't cost a cent to investigate.

FOR SALE—
We offer for sale 100 shares of treasury stock in a land development syndicate, the profits of which will be enormous. The present value of the holdings of the company is $250,000. On this basis each share is worth $2500. This block for further development is offered at $125 per share. No surer, safer or better investment can be found. The company is composed of conservative, reputable Los Angeles business men, whose names are a guarantee of success. The enterprise is already a winner. We invite the investigation of cautious investors. It is not likely that any more stock will be offered for sale, as the expenditure of $10,000 to $12,000 additional in improvements will be sufficient to place the property on the market. You can buy one or more shares, but we urge you to act quickly.

FOR SALE—
MAIN STREET.
DO YOU know that Main street is to be widened to a 100-foot boulevard to beyond Jefferson?
DO YOU KNOW that it is the best north and south business street, all the way out?
Are you aware that you can figure an income on anything bought on Main for business purposes?
Also that if you wait for these improvements to go in that you will be compelled to pay twice and three times what you can buy for on Main now?
Don't wait until it is too late and then blame us because you didn't take time by the forelock.
When we offer you a 55-foot corner at $450 per foot that can be handled for $30,000, north of Adams street,
Why don't you buy it and be sole owner, rather than go into a syndicate where you've got nothing to say?
If we could guarantee this price forever, you would not need to be in a hurry.
But we fear that the property will advance if we don't sell it prior to March 4, therefore step lively.

WANTED—
AN OPPORTUNITY FOR BIG AND SURE PROFITS.

It has been our good fortune, during the past few years, to get hold of some mighty good real estate propositions. We have made some money for ourselves, and more for our associates and clients.

Everybody who has invested in Los Angeles real estate during the past five years has made money—many have made a great deal. Those who have been wise enough to invest in first-class subdivisions have made enormous profits.

Would you be willing to invest money in a high-class subdivision enterprise inside the old city limits of Los Angeles—in a stock company—not a syndicate—in which a net profit of at least 300 per cent. is assured?

Would you invest money in this enterprise if you should receive, together with your stock, a guaranty that within six months you may, IF YOU WISH, receive your money back together with 10 per cent. profit.

Would you like such a guaranty to be backed by something more substantial than more words and promises? Would you like to have ample collateral security?

YOU MAY HAVE ALL THESE.

A stock company has been organized to subdivide and improve 200 acres within 15 minutes' ride from First and Spring sts., inside the city limits, in a section greatly sought for homes by the best classes of people, high and sightly, commanding a fine view and including over 3 miles of frontage of superb hill-top building sites.

This property was purchased at a very low figure, the cost of improvement has been carefully estimated; features are projected, which cannot be duplicated in ordinary tracts, and which add greatly to the desirability of the subdivision, both for homes and for investment.

Some of the best known and shrewdest real estate investors in Los Angeles have made large subscriptions to the stock of the company.

A small block of stock is offered to the general public.

We have ourselves invested considerable money in the enterprise and such is our abiding faith in it, that we will make a proposition to purchasers of the stock now offered for sale.

WE WILL GUARANTEE TO PURCHASERS—SHOULD THEY DESIRE TO SELL THEIR STOCK WE WILL PURCHASE THE SAME WITHIN SIX MONTHS FROM MARCH 1, 1907, AND RETURN THE PURCHASE PRICE, TOGETHER WITH 10 PER CENT. PROFIT.

This offer will be open for a short time only, and the amount of stock offered for sale is limited. It is beyond question the very best real estate opportunity in the market, and those who wish stock should apply at once.

This proposition should appeal especially to people who know the value of high and sightly lands for residence purposes, as the property is situated on the east side of the Arroyo Seco between Avenues 39 and 40, and consists of over 200 acres of beautiful rolling hills.

One car line now reaches the property and another is contracted for to be built at once.

I now offer 200 shares of $100 each in a business lot, worth $20,000. You can buy as many shares as you desire. Investors have made large profits through me.

FOR SALE—
HOME EXTENSION RESULTS.

The proof of the pudding is always in the eating, and there are results on record for the guidance of every homeseeker entering the State of California.

The Home Extension Association organizes the Homeseekers' Clubs. You can join.

The Home Extension Association then finds the land in the largest tracts that is expected by the most experienced and careful men in the State.

The Home Extension Association then distributes the land in 5, 10, 20 or 40-acre tracts to the members of the Homeseekers' Club at low wholesale prices.

A townsite is laid out in the best spot and, as the members rear their homes, a church springs up, with great value to the members who hold town lots at grazing land prices.

The question is not shown in the record of our three big colonies in Monterey, Tulare and Kern counties.

In fact place the colonists own their own water system.

In Clark Colony the membership price was $25 an acre, including water stock.

In Alpaugh Colony land was $15 an acre, water stock $6.

In Wasco Colony land was $22.50 an acre, water stock $5.

No lands in similar locality ever retailed for less than twice to three and four times these prices.

To properly gauge the work of the association, compare the land with the prices in any locality in the State.

Owing to our unusual facilities, this Association can finance and distribute colony lands at one-fourth to one-third the usual retail prices and still make fair remunerative margins in operation.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating. Where has any first-class land been opened at above prices during the past five years?

All of our Homeseekers' Clubs have averaged 90 per cent. experienced men from Southern California. That proves that the land was good or they would not have taken it.

Attend our regular evening meeting and stereopticon lecture and bring the family to see the pictures of our three big colonies.

LAND PRODUCES $800 TO $1000 PER ACRE ANNUALLY.
ROGUE RIVER VALLEY, OR.

Our climate combines all the best features of California and Oregon and possesses none of the objectionable features of either, here we have no excessive rains; the rainfall averaging twenty inches, with days and weeks of bright, clear, sunny days during the winter; no excessive cold, the temperature seldom falling to the freezing point; during this terrible cold wave from which the entire country is still struggling to extricate itself, we did not even have a frost here; no excessive hot weather, while in summer blankets are a necessity; the nights always being cool.

OUR APPLE AND PEAR INDUSTRY is our greatest attraction; here we have orchards which produce per acre $600 to $1000 annually. Our pears bring the highest prices in the world in the markets of New York and London. Our Newtown apples also bring higher prices than those of any other section of the world. Our Spitzenberg apples are unsurpassed for quality, color and size. This industry is still in its infancy here, we have thousands of acres of undeveloped lands irrigated, and lands at lower prices than ordinary alfalfa lands are selling for in California. Here we get four crops of alfalfa without irrigation.

Three new railroads are to be built immediately, one to our copper mines, one to our coal mines, and one to our timber. Our lands will produce anything that grows out doors, corn, grain, vegetables, alfalfa, fruits of all kinds and berries of all varieties from April till November.

Our copper mines are developing such a volume of ore that the entire mining world is now turning its eyes this way.

Medford is a beautiful little city of 4000 inhabitants, possessing all modern conveniences and with the hosts of homeseekers now settling here, promises to have a population of 10,000 in the course of a couple of years. We have splendid schools, electricity, new water system now going in, fine business houses, hotels that any large city might feel proud of, and a delightfully picturesque environment.

We can offer more undeveloped opportunities for money making than any other section of the United States, and that with natural attractions unsurpassed anywhere.

FOR SALE—
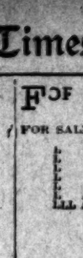
Country Property.

FOR SALE—



FOR TWO YEARS USAGE.

Here is something, if you are ready to farm some land.

It is undoubtedly one of the finest offers ever made by this famous Home Extension Association.

Viewed from your standpoint we are offering to let you have some of our finest land in the Clark Colony, (Salinas Valley) absolutely free of cost for two years trial. You plant the crops and the entire product is yours without rent of any kind.

Viewed from our standpoint—we are selling you the land; and yet both standpoints are absolutely correct.

We have a few tracts from one acre to forty acres each of this famous Salinas Valley potato, apple, pear and alfalfa land.

The selling price is about $60 per acre, including the water stock, and the land absolutely owns the water.

We will sell you any of this land, while it lasts, under a guarantee that we will refund your entire purchase price in two years if you do not like the land.

You must agree to crop it at least once.

That means idle speculators are barred out.

All of this land is worth over $100 an acre, and many of the adjoining pieces cannot be bought for that.

We are not farmers we are land dealers and if you want to farm here is your chance.

Go up there in the most famous potato and bean land in the State. Take off two crops and then turn the land back to us without making us any remuneration.

Does it sound too good?

Well, it may sound so, but the joker is right here. We have the land to sell and prefer not to hold it idle as we are organizers of colonies and our good friends up there want more good neighbors. If you once take it you will never let us have it back in two years,—and in fact we would only wish that you might do so as it is constantly increasing in value.

It means however, just as we say. If you are so undecided as to not know where to locate, you can try this before you buy. It and know that you have an institution stronger than many banks to return your money if you find it is not what you want. Step lively this way if wanted for it will go faster than Wasco went.

FOR SALE—
For the benefit of those doubting souls who cannot yet believe the story of the fabulous increase in the value of lots in Manhattan, Shakespeare and Manhattan Beaches, as officially reported by the United States government and described in the Times of February 3rd, we publish below portions of a letter just received from the Wiswell Milling, Machinery and Mining Company, to whom Shakespeare property is leased for gold mining purposes by Mr. James G. Cortelyou, owner of the property.

"Salt Lake City, Feb. 20th, 1907.

Mr. James C. Cortelyou,
Los Angeles, Cal.

My Dear Sir:—Upon my return I found Mr. Wiswell, who is our inventor, metallurgist and mechanical engineer, engaged in the rushing of a lot of machinery that had to be shipped to Mexico on the 15th, so that we shall be crowded to get the additions required for your work completed in time to reach you within the thirty days. Of course, we can get there and commence the treatment of the sand, but we have practically satisfied ourselves on that point and would prefer to come equipped for work, and if you see fit to do so, I will ask you to extend the time for commencing 15 days beyond the 20 provided for.....

Mr. Wiswell is very enthusiastic over the prospect and is devising some additions which your work will require. We shall be there at the earliest possible date, regardless of any further allowance of time.

Very truly yours,

FRANK H. CLARK,
Secretary and Manager.

Mr. Cortelyou has granted the extension asked, so that March 16th is now the date at which work must begin in earnest.

Another anniversary of the birth of George Washington, the Father of his Country, has passed. He was a great personage, that marvelous man who never told a "fake" great in many ways, but great especially as a person of veracity, a striking example for all mankind. Really it is refreshing to meet a strictly truthful man, even in this present epoch, and when one does come in contact with such a person he is thoroughly conscious of being in the presence of a great and powerful man. A man who does things because he has the confidence of the people who know him. And such a man is the "wizard" of the best trader in the United States. In truthfulness he is the reincarnation of George Washington himself. And while he could tell a lie if he chose, he chooses not to do so, and when the "wizard" says it it is true. If he says to you he can trade your property with profit to you, so it will be. He too, is a marvelous man, marvelous in many ways, but none the less in veracity. Read his bulletin today, all truth, the unadulterated "George Washington brand." Then come in, or write and give the "wizard" a chance. It is now up to you.

Would you trade $1 for $2? We are in a position to trade clear BUSINESS and residence lots in SEARCHLIGHT, Nev., for good equities in Southern California, or clear EASTERN. Listen.

We have taken a large acreage proposition, to which we wish to give our entire attention, and the few remaining lots in our tract will be exchanged at actual cash value.

Searchlight is on the verge of one of the greatest real estate and mining excitements ever witnessed. The Santa Fe R.R., will be completed in March, then property will double or treble in value. If you get in now you get the advance which is destined to follow. Think of Goldfield and Tonopah, then remember that Searchlight will be a city when the others are forgotten.

If you want in on this there is no time to lose.

(AUTHORIZED ANNOUNCEMENT)

Claims Discovery of Scientific Cause For "Duality of Man"

Dr. Jasper W. Corey Says we Have Two Brains and That One is Blank and Should be Educated.

Has Found the Means by Which We Can See Into "The Great Unknown."

The "Duality of Man," for hundreds of years recognized as a purely metaphysical theory, has been definitely located and placed on a scientific basis by Dr. J. W. Corey, a noted student and lecturer of this city.

According to Dr. Corey, medical men have, through years of investigation, proven that the human brain is a "pair organ," the same as the lungs and other organs having two definite sections. They have also discovered that in our present state of intellectual development, we utilize but one of our brains.

While engaged in his physiological researches, Dr. Corey says he found that the two brains were separate and distinct and that both were susceptible to different impressions. All the faculties of the mind are located in one brain, in fact, post-mortem examinations have established conclusively that many persons have lived for years with only one brain, the other having been destroyed by disease, yet none of their faculties were impaired.

Now the interesting part of Dr. Corey's discovery follows:

He says that the second brain, which he has named the Superhuman or Divine brain, is absolutely blank and waiting to be utilized by those who find the way to educate that brain and the knowledge of the higher life, the things beyond our ken in the "Great Unknown," the knowledge that thousands have striven for since time was, can be attained by he who knows how to educate his "Superhuman" brain, for that brain holds the power. Dr. Corey has discovered the means by which this higher power can be attained and he says that the education of the "Superhuman" brain is possible to any one having sufficient will power and determination to attempt the task. The Bible is the best text book of the sciences having directly to do with the education of the superhuman brain. All so-called higher criticism is disarmed when its simple and profound truths are scientifically presented. Sir Oliver Lodge, the eminent English scientist, is a recently published article, asks, "How may we become informed of things too high for our own knowledge?" He himself answers his own question. We should strive to learn from the great teachers, prophets and poets of the human race, whose writings are opened to us by education. Especially should we learn how to interpret and understand the Bible, which the Nations hold in such high honor. The soul is the connecting link between God and Man and the seat of the soul is in the Superhuman or Divine brain, thus by educating this brain you educate the soul, bringing you nearer to God and putting you in possession of the higher knowledge. On thinking men, this should make a deep and lasting impression, for the hope of humanity lies in for higher intellectual development of the Superhuman brain, thus reaching the Soul and awakening it from its long sleep.

Dr. Corey maintains that women will take the lead in attaining this knowledge and imparting it to future generations, and that most of this knowledge will be imparted by them to children.

In support of that statement, Dr. Corey points to the fact that woman's mission in this world is to reproduce the human species and educate the children, (which latter statement is borne out by the fact that the great majority of educators are women,) while that of man is to provide for and protect the home.

Dr. Corey has given a number of very interesting lectures on this absorbing subject and promises that he will more fully go into the subject of the "Duality of Man" during his lecture tonight at Blanchard Music Hall. The public are cordially invited to attend this lecture and the doctor promises some interesting disclosures. The lectures are absolutely free and there are no collections of any kind taken up. They will commence promptly at 8 p. m., and as the doctor has already a considerable following, a large audience is expected to be present.

MAY ABOLISH UPPER HOUSE.

Liberals Move to Get Rid of Gilded Chamber.

Question Goes Deeply Into British Politics.

Weakness and Strength of the House of Lords.

BY ARTHUR R. HINTON.

The authoritative announcement in dispatches from London of the Liberal government's programme for a grand assault upon the House of Lords and home rule for Ireland, doubtless means that there will be big happenings in British politics very shortly. Whether Ireland is or is not to have her ambitions of a century gratified is not the main issue. Nor is it solely a question whether there shall be an hereditary upper house in the British Parliament or an elective or appointive one or none at all, the principal issue. The question goes much deeper than this and involves the continuation of the entire social order and even of the British empire as now constituted.

The House of Lords is both a legislative and judicial body. When acting in the former capacity it has a total of some 560 members, including representative Irish peers and the bishops of the Church of England. In its judicial capacity only the Law Lords act. It is in its legislative capacity that the House is being attacked, its judicial reputation being quite high, as high, in fact, as that of any tribunal in the world, and there seems to be no disposition to attack it on that score.

The membership of the House is made up chiefly of hereditary nobles, the only qualification in most cases required being that a man shall be "the son of his father." Men of wealth, culture and high station all of them, they form a class undoubtedly strongly antagonistic to a number of more or less popular movements. By far the majority are members of the Church of England and stand with the bishops for its interests. Were the House able to stand out permanently against all measures of which the members disapproved, the history of Great Britain would be different. Certain it is that now, if any, of the Irish reform measures, such as the various land bills, church disestablishment and many others, would ever have been enacted—at least, not without a creation of new peers to outvote the old members, an expedient that has not been resorted to for over a century, but this has not been the case. Once the peers may reject a bill outright, but if the next elections uphold the government in its course the bill is, passed, although theoretically there is nothing to compel the peers to this course. Often bills are amended in many important particulars and hasty, ill-advised legislation checked, and the House is a barrier to much socialistic and labor legislation.

Trained from birth to their position, the peers, no one can deny, have possessed among their numbers some of the greatest British statesmen. There was the late Marquis of Salisbury, than whom none stood higher; today we have the Marquis of Ripon, Lord Lonsdale and Lord Roseberry. Some of the greatest men of British history have sat in the House of Lords either by inheritance or personal elevation to the peerage. The upper house is essentially a business body and it transacts its affairs with promptitude and dispatch, and at the same time with a thoroughness that should be commended to many American legislative bodies, and which has been commended by British journals on occasions to the House of Commons when the latter shows a disposition to talk too much and do too little.

MANY WEAKNESSES.

On the ther hand there are many weaknesses in the upper house. For over a century it was overwhelmingly Tory in sentiment, which showed itself so plainly when Gladstone's home rule came up to be defeated by a vote of over 400 to 41. A small and lonely group is formed by the handful of Liberal peers. On this question of home rule the feeling is strong among the peers and their followers and it is likely that any radical measure will again receive short shrift at their hands and a more moderate measure, such as the administrative bill proposed by the present government, so amended as to be, perhaps, rejected by the Commons, as was the late Educational Bill. It is likely that the policy will be to send up to the Lords a long series of popular measures, almost certain to be rejected or amended so as to completely change their character, and then use this as a means of inflaming public sentiment to the point where the government feels it safe to appeal to the country by a dissolution of Parliament. In the event of victory at the polls an attempt may be made to either frighten the upper house into agreeing to its own abolition or reform or the creation of new peers to vote for the desired reforms.

Born to his seat or elevated to it by royal appointment, nothing seems to unseat a peer. Last summer the Marquis Townsend was legally adjudged to be mentally incompetent to manage his own affairs and was placed under guardianship, but he is still competent to aid in managing the affairs of the nation. This is not an exaggeration or a fictitious case, but an actual fact that is of record and can be fully verified. When the Home Rule Bill came up an insane peer was brought from a sanitarium to vote against it.

COMPLICATED SITUATION.

While few will deny that the hereditary chamber is an anomaly in modern political conditions, there are many factors entering into the matter. In their action upon the Education Bill, which was seized upon as the basis of the present attack, if the great meetings held in various parts, the resolutions passed by Angelican and Roman Catholic societies, the denunciations hurled from the pulpits, petitions for the bill's rejection and the editorial columns of leading London papers last summer and fall when the controversy was at its height, be any criterion, the Lords undoubtedly were backed in their course by a large element of the people, whether a majority or a minority can be best judged by the outcome or at least by one knowing British conditions from birth or years of residence. Similar conditions in this country would generally be so interpreted.

The Irish Nationalists have always been bitter opponents of the Lords, as well they may be. Unsparing and merciless denunciation and ridicule has been poured upon the peers by Irish press and orators, but on the Educational Bill, the Nationalists, deaf to the appeals of the government and the possible danger to their hopes of home rule, broke completely with their allies and voted solidly against the bill. On the final vote Mr. Redmond, the Irish leader said: "For once in my life, I can say 'Thank God, we have the House of Lords.'" Now the Lords have brought about the result Mr. Redmond wished, how will he and his followers do when the matter of sustaining them comes before the country?

Again there is a fair-sized Roman Catholic element in England, much of it Irish or Irish descent, and Liberal in politics, which has apparently broken completely with the government on education and last fall sent appeals to the Lords to reject the bill. On the other hand there are the Nonconformist, the Socialist and Labor-union elements all favoring the government strongly.

Again the man who stood out most prominently on the government's side in the educational controversy, the author of the bill, whose speeches attracted attention everywhere—Augustine Birrell, late president of the Board of Education—is now Chief Secretary for Ireland and will lead in the home-rule fight. While accepted by the Irish as better than nothing, the proposed "administrative" home rule will be regarded by them as only temporary and a stepping-stone to more complete independence. In their rejection of home rule before, it will be remembered, the peers were sustained at the polls by a large majority and they may feel strong enough to risk it again.

CONCESSIONS TO IRELAND.

As a further concession to the Irish the government has, it appears, decided to stand sponsor for the bill introduced by Mr. Duffy to deprive the Marquis of Clanricarde of the management of his estate around Loughrea, County Galway. This bill is almost certain to be thrown out by the Lords. Clanricarde is one of the absentee landlords who are so hated in Ireland. He has never visited the island and his affairs are managed by an agent, one E. Shaw Tener. The writer visited Loughrea last August, and at that time this individual, who had just evicted a leading merchant solely on account of his political activity, was going about with a guard of six policemen armed with rifles to protect him from the enraged people and sentries were stationed around his residence night and day, while fifty policemen were stationed within call in this town of less than 1000 people as the result of the eviction.

From citizens and officers alike I gathered data as to the Marquis's course during the past twenty-five years. A retired constable told me of how it was necessary some years ago to take down a firing party of soldiers from the garrison at Galway to aid in dispersing the peasantry at one eviction. Riot after riot has occurred, police and bailiffs have been killed and their assassins never caught for the Loughrea people boast that there are no informers among them. One of the predecessors of the present agent, Tener, was murdered.

In his entire course Lord Clanricarde has acted within his legal rights and even the present government, with characteristic British respect for the law, has upheld him to the fullest extent, sending 300 constables from Dublin to aid in an eviction that was bitterly denounced by the Prime Minister himself in Parliament. From the point of view of the Irish and even of many Unionists, his position is much like that of some employers of labor, whose treatment of their employes, while entirely legal, is difficult to defend morally and is sometimes effectively urged as a justification for the illegal course of the labor unions.

In presenting his bill Mr. Duffy declared in Parliament that it was useless to hope for peace while such men as Clanricarde were allowed to exercise power in Ireland.

REAL ESTATE BRIEFS.

For a Handsome Home.

Mrs. Gertrude Wilkinson has sold to Hansen Moore a lot on Western avenue, north of Adams, 75x175 feet, for $5000. This last purchase gives Mr. Moore a frontage of 205 feet on Western avenue, which he contemplates improving with a $35,000 mansion in the near future.

Pasadena Buildings Planned.

There is now being erected a new and imposing store building by Pashgian Bros., on the south side of East Colorado street, between Marengo and Euclid avenues, Pasadena. This property they recently purchased at a stated price of $63,000. It is the old Dr. Jaynes home place. The ground floor of the new building will be used as an oriental rug store. The construction will be pushed as fast as material can be procured.

The next extensive improvement on East Colorado will be the erection of a skyscraper at the corner of Worcester avenue, where the First Presbyterian Church now stands. This building will probably contain a spacious opera-house, besides many modern offices. Land fronting on East Colorado street adjoining this site is now held at $1000 a front foot.

Buy at Shatto and Union.

The sale of the lot on the northwest corner of Shatto and Union street by Lucy J. Reynolds to Dr. E. L. Vaughan for $15,000 was reported this week. The lot has a frontage of 120 feet on Shatto street and 134½ on Union, and is improved with an old-fashioned ten-room residence on the rear. It is said Dr. Vaughan intends to remove the building and erect a handsome mission style apartment house, to cost about $25,000.

For Modern Tourist Hotel.

The Santa Monica Board of Trade has secured an option on the Ocean-avenue block between Utah and Colorado streets in that town, and is about to open negotiations for the erection of a modern tourist hotel on the site. This commercial organization is in correspondence with several persons in the East and Arizona, and the Hotel Committee is encouraged to believe that something will be done soon.

—o—

Santa Barbara Building Activity.

The building activity in the residential districts of Santa Barbara and its suburb, Montecito, exceeds like operations for the same time of the year, in the history of the city. Among the more pretentious homes in the Montecito Valley are those under construction for E. T. Vail, a local banker; George Coleman, a retired capitalist, and for S. F. Calif, a wealthy easterner. The Calif house will cost $35,000, and will be situated on the Coast Highway, near the Country Club.

Mr. Peabody of Cluett, Peabody & Co. of Chicago is expected soon to inspect the plans for his proposed improvements on the Eucalyptus tract east of the golf links of the Country Club.

Harold A. Richardson of New York City, owner of "Mura Vista," a show place in Montecito, is another wealthy easterner who will build in Montecito, on Eucalyptus drive.

—o—

In Flower Court Tract.

Miller & Lewis Company report the sale of two lots 95x67 feet in their Flower Court tract, corner of Court and Flower streets, to R. B. Trace for $7500. Mr. Trace will improve with modern apartment house. Also three lots in same tract 45x67 feet, for $9000, to a local investor, who will improve one of them with an up-to-date apartment house, holding the others for investment.

—o—

Buys Carr-street Lot.

A. A. McCreary has purchased from A. W. Ross a lot on Carr street, between Main and Hill, 50x150 feet, for $15,500. There are no improvements on the property. The deal was made through the George W. Cortelyou Company.

The same agency also reported the sale this week for J. O. Kriehn to A. W. Ross of a lot on Ninth street, 275 feet east of Santa Fé avenue, 40x149 feet, for $4000.

Vermont Avenue Square Activity.

Sales of Vermont Avenue Square lots aggregating more than $52,000, during the last twenty days, are reported by S. J. White & Co., the Wright & Callender Company, Fox & Wilson and Leo J. Maguire & Co. This represents a total of fifty-six lots, and is considered a phenomenal record for February. During the last fortnight the square has been in process of transformation into a park, with wide stretches of lawn, graceful walks and groups of trees and shrubs. The streets in the new addition are being treated by the petrolithic process, which has proved so successful for paving at Santa Monica and Pasadena. The public school on the property has lately been made a part of the city school system.

GREAT CROWD OF COLONISTS.

Thousands Prepare for Trip to Southland.

Special Rates and Trains Over All Roads.

Arrangements Made to Bring Homeseekers.

In thousands of homes throughout the country preparations are making this week to take advantage of the special colonist rate made by the railroads to California and intermediate points.

But it is to Los Angeles that the eyes of the great majority of colonists are turning. To the sunny orange groves and walnut orchards of the Southland are their faces set, there to begin a new life, free from the blizzards and snows of less favored regions.

Practically it is only those who come to California with a determination to make permanent homes that the special rates of fare upon all the trunk lines and their branches will apply, for the fare is only a one-way fare, with no return possible under this rate.

There has never been a colonist rate made necessary from California eastward.

And so it is that upon the hundreds of special colonist cars which will begin rolling from all points of the compass toward the land of fruits and flowers beginning March 1, homeseekers will predominate and whole families will come in parties, for whom a California welcome is waiting.

For a long time ahead the railroads have been preparing for the rush of colonists to Southern California. Schedules have been made, cars have been stationed at various points from which traffic will flow, extra engines are in readiness to start the pilgrims toward their new life, special arrangements have been made for handling the crowds, and dining, sleeping and chair cars have been provided for the accommodation of the travelers.

HEAVY TRAVEL.

With its branch roads and long trunk lines the Southern Pacific and its connections have prepared for heavy travel. At the great traffic centers like Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans and New York, special trains will be made up to come over the connecting roads and the Southern Pacific tracks to Los Angeles and San Francisco.

From many other points special colonist cars will be hitched on to regular trains and come right through on schedule time. The special trains will be made up as the need arises, but every day there will come in over the tracks of the Southern Pacific between twenty and thirty cars of colonists, so far as can be estimated.

Of this number nearly half are expected over the lines of the Burlington Route, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific and connecting by the Denver and Rio Grande with the Southern and Union Pacific lines to Los Angeles and San Francisco.

From New Orleans will come the colonists by sea from New York by way of the Morgan line, also by the Georgia Central and by connecting lines. But it is from the Middle West, the great farming districts of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri that the bulk of the permanent colonists are expected to arrive.

The Denver and Rio Grande has made special arrangements further ahead than any of the other roads for this colonist travel. General Passenger Agent S. K. Hooper announces that about seventy-seven through cars from eastern points will go over the D. & R. G. every week during the colonist period from March 1 to April 30.

TRUNK LINES AGREED.

Although all of the trunk lines are agreed as to the rates and service in connection with this colonist travel each road has its own attractions and each will secure its percentage of business. The Santa Fé has the same rates from central points in the East and Middle West that the other roads have and besides the attractions of its fine service grants five-day stop-overs at Ash Fork and Williams, Ariz., for a visit to the Grand Cañon of the Colorado, at the option of the traveler.

While it was the Southern Pacific which first inaugurated the colonist rates and plan of travel, the Santa Fé soon afterward joined in maintaining the rates and has done much to popularize this scheme for bringing good citizens to California and prosperity.

The San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake is the latest of the railroads to join in the colonist rates, now that it has a connecting line with the East via Salt Lake City. On this line separate colonist trains will be made up as necessary, besides special cars in connection with its regular and connecting trains from the East. Its special rate from Ogden and Salt Lake City is $25. This is a high rate compared with the rates further East, such as $25 from Atchison, Kan., Omaha, Neb., St. Joseph, Mo., Kansas City, Mo., and Denver, Col., or Houston, Tex. But the Salt Lake can't help it.

SPECIAL RATES.

Other rates via the Salt Lake Route are $32 from Chicago, $31 from Peoria, $30 from St. Louis, $30 from New Orleans, $31.65 from Cairo, Ill., and Memphis, Tenn., and $34.90 from Minneapolis and St. Paul. Over the Santa Fé it is $34.85 from Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Stop-overs will be allowed upon all colonist tickets at all points in California except San Francisco and Los Angeles. This is for the purpose of giving the proposed settlers a chance to look at lands outside of the two big business centers. There will also be stop-overs on the Denver and Rio Grande system at Elko, Hazen, Reno, Lovelock, Winnemucca and Las Vegas, Nev.

The regular colonist rates are as follows: From Chicago, $33; from St. Louis, $30; from points on the Missouri River, $25; from Sioux City, Iowa, $27; from Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, $25. These rates are in most cases less than half the fare of a round trip ticket rate east of Denver. West of the latter city there is no saving.

THROUGH TRAINS.

Some of the through tourist sleeper trains scheduled for Los Angeles under the colonist rates are from St. Louis, daily by Missouri Pacific, train No. 1, 9 a.m., connecting with the Denver and Rio Grande at Pueblo and leaving that city daily at 1:35 p.m., and connecting at Salt Lake City with the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake line, leaving the Mormon city at 9 p.m., and arriving in Los Angeles at 8 a.m.

From Chicago, operating directly to Los Angeles, train No. 3 via the Burlington route, leaving the Windy City at 11 p.m., daily; leaves Denver daily at 9:30 a.m., by the Denver and Rio Grande, and connects with the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake, leaving Salt Lake City daily at 9 p.m., reaching Los Angeles at 8 a.m.

By way of San Francisco via the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul from Chicago, leaving that city at 10:25 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Through Kansas City to Pueblo by Missouri Pacific; there by Denver and Rio Grande at 12:25 Thursdays and Saturdays to Ogden, leaving over the Southern Pacific at 11:55 Fridays and Sundays and arriving in San Francisco at 4:28 p.m. on Saturdays and Mondays, finally reaching Los Angeles on Sundays and Tuesdays at 11 a.m.

Still another train leaves Chicago at 11 p.m. on Wednesdays and Thursdays by way of the Chicago and Northwestern, reaching Denver by the Union Pacific and leaving that city by the Denver and Rio Grande at 8:30 a.m. Fridays and Saturdays, and through Ogden by Southern Pacific to San Francisco, arriving at 4:28 p.m. Sundays and Mondays, and reaching Los Angeles before noon Mondays and Tuesdays.

EXTRA COLONIST CARS.

These are a few of the principal short-time trains, but there are a number of others over the Santa Fé and Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and Rock Island and their connecting lines, besides which nearly every through train from the East, except the California Limited over the Santa Fé, and the Sunset Limited over the Southern Pacific, will have one or more colonist cars as a part of its make-up.

Just how many colonists are expected over the various lines from March 1 to April 30 cannot be approximately estimated even by expert railroad officials. They say that not as many are expected this year as last for the reason that many will wait until May and take advantage of the special convention rates to Los Angeles. Still it may well be that they will be agreeably surprised.

There are hundreds of thousands of acres of fertile lands in the empire of the Southwest which are available for colonists at reasonable rates and by the rapidity with which they are filling up it will take only a few years to see a great population of prosperous farmers and orchardists in every valley and plain of the Southland.

GIVES CITY ORCHIDS.

Mrs. Emily L. Smith, widow of the late Eben Smith, who died last November in Denver, but whose home was on West Seventh street in this city, has offered to Mayor Harper for the city of Los Angeles a gift of the valuable collection of orchids and other rare plants which Mr. Smith had taken great pleasure in collecting, and which are now at the Smith residence. A request is made that if the offer is accepted the collection be placed in the conservatory at Eastlake Park. Mr. Smith having been especially attached to that institution.

In the case of the Standard Oil Company and C. D. Holt vs. the State of Tennessee, involving the constitutionality of the anti-trust laws, the Tennessee Supreme Court yesterday reversed the case as to the Standard Oil Company and approved it as to Holt.

I suffered for a long time from catarrh of the nose and throat with the usual disagreeable symptoms. It is awful to think how miserable I was under the old condition. You have cured me and I consider it wonderful, as the trouble had become chronic. One cannot readily find candid and honest physicians at such reasonable fees. Have sent you a number of my friends, who are equally pleased.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

From childhood I have been more or less inconvenienced by a growth in the nasal organs, which made it difficult, yes, impossible, for me to breathe in the proper manner, through the nostrils. It also impaired my speaking.

At last I decided to consult some specialist concerning the matter. Dr. S. G. Edwards, of the Broadway Physicians' and Surgeons' Association, was the specialist I selected. He performed an operation, removing the growth, and now I feel like a new and healthier person.

It affords me gerat pleasure to give Dr. Edwards my highest commendation as to skill, ability and conscientiousness. Yours very truly,

DRINK HABIT

Is Every Drinking Man, in a Degree, Insane? Experts Say Yes—That Is Why Men Who Drink Believe That Liquor Does Them Good Instead of Harm, and Why They Always Claim They Can Quit Whenever They Want To, Yet Never Do.

WIVES! MOTHERS! SISTERS!

It Rests With You to See That the One You Love Is Cured—Alcoholic Poison Has So Weakened His Brain That He Does Not Realize He Is Being Ruined—Cure Him Either WITH or WITHOUT His Knowledge.

The Commonwealth Institute, 2358 Majestic Bldg., Denver, Colo., method of curing the liquor habit is the most successful of all cures for this evil. It is a regular one-hundred-dollar institute treatment, so formulated that the victim of liquor can be cured in the privacy of his own home either WITH or WITHOUT his knowledge or consent. The Secret remedy is to be given where he will not consent to be cured, and is a powder, tasteless and odorless, to be administered in tea, coffee or food, the different ingredients being plainly printed on each box of medicine so that you may know you are giving him a remedy that is perfectly harmless—cures effected in from 30 to 90 days. The Secret treatment is for the patient whose brain is not so badly weakened by alcoholic poison but that he realizes he needs a cure. It is a liquid, and will cure the most severe case in THREE DAYS' TIME, and as yet has never failed to effect a perfect cure in three days in a single case. Absolutely harmless.

FREE---$1.50 BOX

Of the Secret Commonwealth Institute treatment for the liquor habit, or bottle of the Non-Secret, sent to any reader of this paper, prepaid, for 25c, stamps or coin. The quantity of treatment sent, delivered to you with all costs paid, stands the Commonwealth Institute $1.50, and the 25c is not asked as payment, nor is it to be received, but as a guarantee of good faith that you really desire to cure some one, or to be cured, for this is too expensive and valuable a remedy to send out satisfying curiosity. Do not confuse this free offer with "free trial offers" which mean three or four doses of medicine. This offer means a box of the Secret or a bottle of the Non-Secret treatment, and if you are not fully satisfied with the remedy the 25c will be returned to you at once.

Positively mention whether it is the Secret or the Non-Secret remedy you desire, for it is essential that you do so. Book of particulars, also free, securely sealed.

ATTACKS THE BRAIN

No drinking man is in his right mind. This is a blunt statement, but a fact is a fact. Before he can be cured he needs treatment in order to rid himself of the curse—he believes that liquor will ruin every one but himself; he is always "going to quit" but never does, showing plainly that he cannot. Alcohol is an accumulative poison, always demanding more of the same poison as relief, and as long as there is a trace of this poison in the system he will drink and never quit until every vestige of it has been eliminated by proper treatment.

Men who have enough judgment and reason left from the ravages of alcoholic poison to know that they need a cure, are also invited to send for a free bottle of Non-Secret treatment; and an especial invitation is extended to men who have paid out several hundred dollars for Institute treatment, only to "relapse," to send 25c, stamps or coin, for it.

WOMAN HIS ONLY HOPE

Woman is the drinking man's mainstay, and if it wasn't for her he couldn't get along at all; therefore, if his brain is not sound enough to realize that he needs a cure, it rests with woman, and it is her plain duty to see that he gets a cure—with his knowledge and consent if he will have the cure that way; without his consent by the Commonwealth Institute Secret remedy if he refuses to be cured. By the Secret method he will never know why he quits drinking unless you tell him—but first try and get his consent to take the Non-Secret treatment, for it is so much more satisfactory to you to know that he wants to quit, and in THREE DAYS the cure is effected.

If you desire a private address, write Charles D. Campbell, Mgr., or the Commonwealth Institute, 2358 Majestic, Denver, Colo., enclosing 25c, stamps or coin, as guarantee of good faith for the free $1.50 treatment.

Are You Willing To Make Money

Are you willing to increase your income and without a moment's work or bother?

Are you willing to increase the value of your estate without taking a single risk, without any worry, attention or responsibility?

Such an investment as the above is precisely what you seek, whether you are a business man with a few loose thousand or a salaried man with only a few dollars available from week to week.

The Citizens' Corporation extends precisely this chance to you, AN OPPORTUNITY TO INVEST in the highest class business property in Los Angeles.

Don't let a prejudice against wildcat mining schemes deter you from giving the Citizens' Corporation the carsful attention which its responsibility, its success and its personnel entitle it.

The plan of the institution will appeal strongly to you. The company is organized for the sole purpose of buying, selling and holding business property for the benefit of stockholders.

Savings banks, considered very conservative, prosper by loans on real estate. If real estate is a safe loan, it must surely be a wise investment. Directors and stockholders of savings banks do not await the slow process of 4 per cent. yearly, they buy realty, which yields several times as much returns. Therefore invest in realty.

In the Citizens' Corporation there are no bonds, no preferred stock, no strings to the company.

There is no promoter's stock—no rake-offs—no ground floor.

The men who have already invested in Citizens' stock are among the most level-headed business men in Southern California, not one or two, not a handful, but dozens and dozens of leading citizens whom you know, trust and respect.

The Citizens' Corporation has already bought one piece of property for $165,300 (the magnificent property adjoining the Burbank Theater on Main street.)

This property has already greatly appreciated in value.

The price of Citizens' stock is $105 a share cash, or $110 a share in monthly payments of $5.

We have already announced that the price of stock will be raised.

This does not mean that the directors will arbitrarily affix an artificial valuation on the stock.

It means that the actual assets of the company have increased to such a point that the company would be losing too much money by selling stock at this price.

Taking the holdings of the company, dollar for dollar, the Citizens' stock is actually worth today considerably more than $110 per share.

This is the phenomenal success that has been achieved in less than two months.

Delay therefore means the absolute certainty of paying a higher price.

Read the names of officers and directors above and ask yourself if you can afford to pass by a chance to become partners of these men.

Call or write for any further information you may desire.

Stock may be ordered by telegraph or mail. Not less than one share or more than fifty shares to any one individual.

The last sale, therefore, makes a profit of $100 per front foot for him. The price was at the rate of $875 a front foot. C. C. Spinks continues his purchases in this section. Several weeks ago he bought what is known as the Geary ranch at Duarte, and this week he has added to this the Mackenzie ranch of thirty-two acres, all in oranges, paying $12,500. This gives Mr. Spinks a frontage on the main street entirely through Duarte.

A PLAINT FOR TEMPLE STREET.

S. H. Rigby makes the following appeal for the consideration of property on West Temple street:

"While so much has been said as to the remarkable and rapid increase in values in various parts of the city, no reference seems to have been made of the special street in the northwest section, and it is to this that the writer may show that it is not alone the southwest that can claim such remarkable and rapid increase in values. For instance, a fifty-foot lot on Temple, only ten blocks from the Courthouse, was sold some few months ago for $2000, and has just been resold for $4300; and yet another instance of a corner on the same street, which was sold for $2500 eighteen months ago, and today is held at $20,000, $10,000 having been offered and refused. Three years ago a fifty-foot lot near Boylston was sold for $850, and has recently been sold for $3500; it is held at $5000 today, and considered a bargain at that; $2000 has been offered and refused for a lot that cost $450 three years ago, on this same street.

"Twenty years ago realty was higher in price on Temple than on Broadway, and buyers preferred the former street. The oil industry set in, and thereby caused a general turn to the southwest, but now that the field is exhausted and the derricks almost entirely cleared away, values are rapidly increasing, and the street being so close to the business center, people are seeking to locate there."

HIGH CLASS HOMES SELL.

The Wright & Callender Company report the following recent sales in residence property: For Lizzie M. Frey to Dr. A. S. Lobingier, a two-story eight-room house, No. 511 Miami street, consideration $8000. For C. J. Thayer to Dolly P. Epps, No. 2211 Romeo street, seven-room bungalow, price $5500. For Dolly E. Harris to E. H. Minor, No. 2202 Romeo street, Harris bungalow, $4750. For C. W. Brown to Bertha Jacoby lot on west side of Westmoreland avenue, between Wilshire boulevard and Seventh, lot 72x149 feet, price $5000. For George R. Shaw to F. R. Donavan, five-room cottage, at No. 2925 San Julian street, price $2550. For Mrs. M. J Dudley to Clara McDonald, lot on Alvarado Terrace facing down Courtland avenue, 50x150 feet, price $3750. The same party also purchased the lot adjoining this on the east from W. F. Jantzen, 50x150 feet, for $4100. For W. T. Hall to Thomas C. Radbone, southwest corner Oak and Sixteenth streets for $6000. For Mary E. Skillman to Achsah English a new five-room bungalow at No. 2165 West Twenty-ninth street, for $3250.

GOOD PRICE ON FLOWER STREET.

Alexander Keating has sold to George W. Jordan the property at Nos. 1126 and 1128 South Flower street, lot 50x155 feet to an alley, for $18,000. The lot is technically known as lot 19 of Spencer subdivision, block 30, Ord's survey. It is on the east side of the street. The house rents for $55 a month. The price compares well with the other recent purchases in that vicinity. The deal was made through the agency of Edwards & Winters.

The same agency reports the sale of the property at Nos. 1696 and 1698 West Washington street, on the south side of the street, just west of Vermont avenue, lot 50x120 feet. The property consists of a one-story frame store building which rents for $40 a month. George W. Jordan sold to Charles M. Latimer for $8000. At the price, it is considered very reasonable, if not a bargain, as property in that section has been selling at prices considerably more than $160 a front foot, at which this deal was made.

George W. Stimson reports the following sales: For D. T. Davenport to S. S. Federman, a lot on Park View in the West Bonnie Brae tract, size 50x150, on the west side of Park View, between Eighth and Ninth streets; consideration $3500.

FOR AUTOMOBILE ROW.

Architect R. B. Young has completed plans for another two-story brick building on Main street. The location is at Fifteenth and Main streets on the southwest corner. The owner is George W. King.

The building calls for an outlay of $18,000. It will be complete in all details and will cover the entire lot, 60x125 feet. The first story will be occupied by the Model Gas Engine Works, which has secured a long lease, and will be arranged specially for their purpose, divided into neat show-rooms with offices, which will have timbered ceilings, a garage and work and machine room. Machine room will contain pit so as to facilitate any repair work underneath the machines. Entire floor on first story will be cement. The second story will be arranged for one of the most complete ballrooms in the city, having an elaborate banquet room adjoining, and will also have a visitors and observation balcony. The floor of the ballroom will be given special attention to make it one of the finest in the city.

Green, the southwest corner of Tenth avenue and Twenty-third street, 100x140 feet, price $2250.

Recent sales through office of C. P. Deyoe: J. Scott to Judge Ballard, unimproved lot 50x176 feet on the east side of Lake street, 200 feet north of Sixth, investment, $2500. T. Rice and others to G. E. Platt, 121x150 feet on the east side of Jasemine place, 150 feet north of Sixth street, consideration $7000. Mr. Platt will build a home costing about $14000. M. J. Green to P. E. Walsh, lot 65x148 feet on the east side of Harvard boulevard, 100 feet north of Wilshire; an investment; $3000. Westminster Square Company to Miss Halbestadt, 60x150 feet on the east side of St. Andrews place, 180 feet north of Linden avenue; an investment; $1800. M. Brown to M. J. Green, a seven-room dwelling on State street, 150 feet north of Bridge street; an investment; $3000.

Another indication of activity at the Palms is the reported sale by Meyer & Johnson of ten acres on Sixth street, between Washington boulevard and the Harriman four-track system for $13,500. The Palms is destined to become one of the finest suburbs of the city, being only a ride of fifteen minutes from the city.

The McCarthy Company reports the following sales in its Florence Heights tract during the past week: L. Winborn, lot on Alleen avenue, near Vermont avenue, $1100; R. Forgesen, lot on Roosevelt avenue, near Vermont avenue, $550; Mrs. R. Hay, two lots on Alleen avenue, near Hoover street, $1100; E. Swanson, lot on Vermont avenue, near Roosevelt avenue, $950; R. Osterhunt, two lots on Alleen, near Hoover street, $1150; L. Weave, lot on McCreery Place, near Vermont avenue, $600; E. Baxter, lot on Monroe avenue, near Hoover street, $575; M. Thomas, lot on Alleen avenue, $550; R. Crawford, lot on Alleen, near Vermont avenue, $550; R. Martin, lot on Alleen avenue, $575; A. Schwartz, lot on Hoover street, near McKinley avenue, $875; E. Moore, lot on corner of Hoover street and Alleen avenue, $900; E. Maynard, lot on McCreery Place, near Hoover street, $625; E. Constance, lot on Vermont avenue, near McCreery Place, $950; S. Winter, house and lot on Randolph street, near Vermont avenue, $2800. The improvements in this popular and attractive tract continues; several houses are in course of construction, and plans are under way for a number of handsome bungalows. The free car continues to carry a large number of people out to this tract.

SEVENTH STREET IN THE FUTURE

ONLY GREAT CROSS-TOWN THOROUGHFARE.

Like Fifth Avenue, New York, Passes Through All Conditions of Life—New Car Line Will Make Main Artery of Travel East and West.

Seventh-street property has been exceptionally active during the past week. Several deals were consummated, and the property affected lies well out from the rest business of Seventh street and Broadway. Unless the prices paid for the properties were strongly affected by developments, now momentarily expected from the center named.

The rumor will not down that there will be an enormous mercantile department store building, to be built on the old Vogle property at the southwest corner of Seventh and Broadway, at present occupied with a three-story brick store and apartment house. This corner, as was announced on page several weeks ago, was bought from Fred Vogle by a syndicate, the names and intentions of which have been made public. One report has it that an eastern firm, desiring to go into the department-store business in Los Angeles, contemplates erecting a mammoth building there. Another, equally creditable, states that an insurance company will erect a ten-story office building on the site. There is a sign displayed on the southeast corner of Seventh and Broadway to the effect that the owner will build a five-story structure on the present. A whisper has been heard that improvements are contemplated on the corner just south and on the diagonally opposite corner. It has been said of a large building on the northwest corner of Main and Seventh streets, but this is denied. This all is having an effect on the values of the property on the thoroughfare east and west of the street.

Then again, the Red car line now being rushed to completion, is having a substantial effect on property in the near future. The town car line at this point will be a great convenience to the city than many have supposed. It will bring the whole east and west right to the very center of which is now under way. The great pile of brick and store on Eighth street on the line is nearing completion and the section between Sixth and Seventh is the scene of much activity. The mammoth twelve-story building, which is now more than half a million dollars, is being reared at Sixth and Main streets, on the logical trend of the business district up and down Seventh street. Many will buy on the thoroughfare with the idea that the eastern and western business districts will be near the main section of the city, thus insuring enduring prosperity to the street.

It has been said that the Seventh street district is more like Fifth avenue, New York, than any other street in the city. In comparison was drawn to the effect that no other street in the city runs through so many different sections in taking its undeviating course through the town. In the east, for instance, it passes through the wholesale district and residence section. Coming west it enters the business district, with its industrial activity. Further west it is taken up, and developed by manufacturing and other substantial interests. Then through the fashionable section, contiguous to the park. Further west it intersects the principal avenues of traffic, and comes into the rapidly-growing commercial and manufacturing section. Following the "course of empire" westward, it finally reaches one of the most exclusive residential sections in Los Angeles, that around the lake, having passed from the center of wealth and influence, from the business district, through the manufactories to the comparatively humble, to none less tense, life of the boarding and store.

"If I had half a million dollars to invest today," said a prominent real estate man, "I do not think I could do better than to invest it in property on Seventh street, between Main and Hill streets, even at the rate of $1000 a front foot. Every lot is a corner in this section named," said the man, "for the man who builds on a corner is sure to put up a fine building, and Seventh street, when it is finished, as it will be, will present the appearance in the way of business of any thoroughfare in the city."

EAGLE ROCK BANK BUILDING.

Bids are being received by Edwards and Winters Company, who are handling, to be erected in the new town of Eagle Rock, on the corner of Colorado avenue and Colorado street, a two-story bank building, which appears on the lithograph shows the architect's perspective drawing of the building. S. Tilton Norton is the architect. The lower floor is to be divided into four storerooms, to be occupied respectively by the Bank of Eagle Rock, Water Company, Eagle Rock Building Company, Eagle Rock Grocery and Market, and the Eagle Rock Realty Company. Upstairs are to be offices and apartments, three rooms each, with three one-room apartments, each equipped with a kitchenette and buffet kitchen, etc. The basement of the building is to be occupied by the interior fittings of the various stores.

MUSIC AND THE STAGE.

"The Virginian," in which Dustin Farnum delighted many people at the Mason Operahouse a season or two ago, will return this week.

Mr. Farnum is an eminently pleasing young actor. He makes no claims to celebrity, except in his own natural way. In "The Virginian" he seems to have found a gold mine, for the piece continues season after season, retaining its popularity with first audiences and winning new friends.

"The Virginian" is the story of the friendship of two men quite as much as the story of the love of a man for a woman. It is an interesting romance of the western plains, written principally about the men who live upon them. The stage version is merely transferred from Owen Wister's novel.

The supporting company will include Frank Campeau, in his impersonation of the cattle thief; Bennet Musson, Frank Vail, Mabel Wright and a number of others.

Henry Clay Barnabee is unable to come to the Coast, according to the latest reports received at the Auditorium. Stage Manager Dewey has just returned from San Francisco, and has practically completed the organization of the chorus. A number of principals are also engaged. Light operas of standard order are to be produced, and several local singers have been spoken of in connection with the scheme.

The Dramatic Week.

"The Virginian" will be at the Mason Operahouse for the week commencing tomorrow evening.

"Under the Red Robe," one of the best specimens of stage romance, will be given this week at the Belasco. It will be the first play produced under Hobart Bosworth's supervision; as announced in The Times, Mr. Bosworth is the new director of the Belasco company. Engaged in the performance will be Lewis S. Stone, Miss Lillian Albertson, Harry Glazier, Howard Scott, Florence Smythe and others.

Following this play the Belasco will offer "Men and Women."

The Ferris company, at the Auditorium, will be seen in Sardou's "La Tosca," commencing tomorrow night. Needless to say, Miss Stone will impersonate the title-character, in which she has previously scored very marked triumphs. Excellent scenery is promised by the management.

Manager Morosco will offer a revival of interest to his patrons today in "A Temperance Town," Hoyt's lively farce. The Burbank actors will be conveniently disposed in the various roles, and a number of specialties will be introduced. Henry Stockbridge and Fay Bainter will contribute, as will also the Marquis Ellis Quartette.

The Lasky-Rolfe Quintette, a musical organization rehearsed and staged by Victor Herbert, and playing his music, will be features during the coming week at the Orpheum.

Eleanor Falke, a dainty young woman, who may be remembered as the Lady Holyrood of "Florodora," brings a song programme which is said to be eminently pleasing. Nellie Beaumont and her company will present a musical sketch entitled "My Busy Day." The Bedouins, an Arab troupe of remarkable agility and dexterity, are also among the newcomers.

Patrice will offer a new sketch. Happy Jack Gardiner, Hickey and Nelson and "Little Hip," the baby elephant, complete the bill.

"At Cripple Creek," a melodrama written by Hal Reid and presented by E. H. Carpenter, is the Grand Operahouse bill for the week. This is an "old school" melodrama of the kind popular before Owen Davis and Theodore Kremer came into vogue. There is more of plot and less of inconsequential episode in these pieces.

In the present production Juan Villasanna is featured as the Mexican bandit; Jesse Hall is seen as the Indian; Miss Virginia Clay plays 'Dynamite Ann," and a winsome little maid is cast as Tato, the Indian boy.

NEWS MATTERS.

Marco Vessella seems to be doing for Long Beach and its surrounding territory what the Symphony Orchestra does for Los Angeles.

On Wednesday evening he presented to a large audience one of the finest programmes of music ever given by any band or orchestral organization in Southern California.

The feature of his list was a complete fantasia on Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust." This number, which was largely of his own arrangement, was very complete and splendidly orchestrated, occupying thirty-five minutes in its rendition. It featured Mr. Vessella's best soloist, Emideo Barilotti, a baritone of superb voice and faultless technique.

Another offering, equally enjoyed, was Bizet's brilliant dramatic overture. The comprehensiveness of the bandmaster's programme was further shown by Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata," a complete fantasia on Perosi's "Resurrection of Lazarus," a Massenet dance, a Meyerbeer selection and a new composition of his own. Mrs. Carolyn von Benson and Naterp Blumenfeld, both of Los Angeles, assisted in the programme.

It is said that the Long Beach municipal band is soon to be enlarged, by private subscription of well-to-do music lovers, to forty-five or fifty men. Vessella certainly merits encouragement, for he is a consummate musician and a hard drill-master, and has brought the present band up to an unusual state of artistic efficiency.

In the excitement of approaching grand opera, the musical public should not forget the coming of Moriz Rosenthal, who will play at Simpson Auditorium a week from tomorrow night.

Many believe that Rosenthal is the greatest living pianist. However that may be, he towers as a giant among his fellows, and is a master to be observed by all who love the best in music.

LeRoy Painter will give a violin recital at Gamut Auditorium on Wednesday evening. Mr. Painter is one of the younger violinists of the city, a member of the Symphony Orchestra, and a pupil of Arnold Krauss.

He will be assisted by Abraham Miller, tenor, and Mrs. A. Loud, pianist.

Mr. Piutti will give a recital at Chickering Hall on Tuesday evening. He will play compositions of Beethoven, Brahms, Chopin, Rubinstein, Rheinberger, Schumann, Nevin, St. Saens, Leschetitzsky and Liszt.

Miss Rey del Valle is to give a concert at Gamut Auditorium one week from next Thursday evening. Miss Lillian Adams and Mr. Blumenfeld will assist. Miss del Valle will sing Brahms's "Cradle Song" and Pergolese's "Nina," for the first time in this city. Chadwick's "Ailah" is also on the programme.

The total strength of Mr. Russell's San Carlo company is said to be about 160 persons—exclusive of mechanics and stage crews. A capable chorus is said to support the principals, and the orchestra here will number about fifty men, directed by Arnaldo Cogti and Sig. Angelini. A ballet corps of twenty will give us the famous "Dance of the Houris," the brilliant ballet from "Gioconda," on the opening night of the opera. The ballet master of this company is Sig. Albertieri, former director of the spectacles at the Metropolitan Operahouse.

The Angelus Garden has been plotted off, and the sale of seats will commence tomorrow morning at Birkel's music house.

The Orpheus Club—J. P. Dupuy, director—has guaranteed a subscription to the Y.W.C.A. building fund, and on March 14, at Simpson Auditorium, a benefit concert will be given to this end. The Women's Choral Club of Pasadena will assist, under the leadership of Mrs. W. B. Clapp.

Ferullo will continue his programme of good music every evening during the week at the new Angelus Palm Garden, Eighteenth and Main streets. The regular matinée days will be observed.

Prof. S. H. Clark of the University of Chicago will give a recital of Rostand's play, "Cyrano de Bergerac," at Simpson Auditorium on Friday evening, March 8.

Among Californians now in Berlin much gratification is felt that an American composer formerly of this State, Edgar Stillman Kelley, has won a distinct triumph in the presentation of a new quintette for piano and strings recently completed by him, and yet in manuscript.

It was performed for the first time in the Beethoven Saal of Berlin on December 12, and won high comments from all the critics.

Before Mr. Kelley went to Berlin, some five years ago, he had gained a high standing among American composers, due in great part to the success of his Chinese suite, his "Macbeth" music, and the music for the dramatic "Ben Hur."

Senor Segurola is a young Spanish baritone of brilliant capabilities. He is alleged to be an unusual actor.

The Li'l' Grumpy Boy.

I met a li'l' grumpy boy,
An' ast him, "Boy, w'at ails yo'?
W't cloud hes darkened all your joy?
W'at trouble is't assails yo'?
I hope your daddy isn't dead—
Er maybe 'tis your mother.
Come, look et me, an' raise your head—
W'at is it, li'l' brother"

The grumpy boy was much amazed;
He stared et me f'm under
The scowlin' brows he slowly raised;
His face was filled with wonder.
"My pa an' ma," sez he, "I' well,
I haven't any sorrow;
I'm grumpy—ef I've got ter tell—
COZ SCHOOL BEGINS TOMORROW!"

Thinks I, Life's school, like thet o' books,
May be a place o' gladness,
Exceep' ter him who always looks
Ter find a cause fur sadness:
The grumpy folks 'r' everywhere,
They hate ter l'arn their lessons,
Although the wisest men declare
The hardest ones 'r' blessins'!

Beauty and the Billboard.

Lapham sat next to the Rambler in the crowded Pasadena car. Both were busily reading The Times.

"I see by the papers," Lapham remarked, "that the indefatigable women of Los Angeles are again going for the billboard nuisance, hammer and tongs. Bully for them! They're succeeding, too, I'm glad to note."

He folded his paper and smiled. "They kick," he declared, "with much better directed energy than that recently displayed in the same cause by Beauty, my wife's pet driving mare.

"Beauty is blessed with a burning curiosity that is truly feminine. Till last week she was enabled to gratify it to her heart's content from her stable. Nothing that passed escaped her interested scrutiny.

"The other day, however, some advertising vandal erected a huge billboard close in front of Beauty's window. It proclaims the merits of somebody's 'Cream of Oats,' I believe. Not being owner of the stable, I was powerless to prevent the outrage.

"No longer could Beauty see and enjoy the passing show. She was not interested in 'Cream of Oats,' and did not pause to ask if it was intended for the delectation of man or beast. Wild with rage, she immediately started to tear the stable down with her heels, and succeeded, too.

"I wonder," Lapham concluded with twinkling eyes, "if it is outraged esthetic sense or balked curiosity that drives our women to such fierce revolt against the billboard?"

A Strictly Business Man.

"The graspin'est man I ever knowed," said Uncle Jerry Peebles, "was an old chap named Snoopins. Somebody told him once that when he breathed he took in oxygen and gave out carbon. He spent a whole day tryin' to find out which of them two gases cost the most if you have to buy 'em. He wanted to know whether he was makin' or losin' money when he breathed."—[Chicago Tribune.

The Antique at Paris.

What the Greek wrought, the vaunting Frank may gain,
And waft the pomp of Hellas to the Seine;
His proud museums may with marble groan,
And Gallia gape on glories not her own.

But ever silent in the ungenial halls
Shall stand the statues on their pedestals.
By him alone the Muses are possessed
Who warms them from the marble—at his breast;
Bright, to the Greek, from stone each goddess grew—

Irene Sargent writes in a late issue of The Keystone: "The usefulness of

THE GOLDEN HOUR. BY ELMER WACHTEL.

This large and important California landscape, 30x40, is now being shown in the exhibition at the Corcoran, Washington. Mr. Wachtel's admission to this exhibit is a signal triumph for Los Angeles and Western art, as not a single picture from the brush of a Chicago or St. Louis artist was accepted.

CHARLES ROLLO PETERS, who is showing eighteen strikingly painted moonlight scenes at Gould's gallery, on Fifth street. Mr. Peters is among the most famous of California's landscape painters.

en artist's biography is outworn, for the commonplace facts of life count but little. Reputation and reward depend largely upon the ability of the artist, and it matters little if he prefer to practice on art craft rather than pure fine art."

René Lalique, the famous Frenchman, though nominally a jeweler, is an accomplished sculptor, painter and scientist. The same is true of Leonide C. Lavaron, the well-known French-American handicrafter, whose latest work as a goldsmith is now on exhibition at the Nicholson gallery in Pasadena.

Her work this season shows even greater versatility than the surprise of a year ago, when Los Angeles art lovers and critics had their first view of her necklaces, pendant-brooches, rings and bracelets—original creations for personal adornment, charmingly mounted in rose or green gold combined with sapphires, tourmalines, aquamarines, topazes, amethysts and pearls, the natural brilliancy of the stones artistically heightened or subdued as the motif suggested.

Miss Lavaron is a master worker in color schemes, and the present liking for individual jewelry is largely due to her influence and leadership at the annual arts and crafts exhibits in the East.

The finest example shown this season is a superb necklace in light green gold—a great white pearl exquisitely mounted between two peacock feathers with quills of diamonds and eyes of sapphires.

Strikingly original is the pendant-brooch—a rich old Madeira topaz, circled with a rose-gold mount of Byzantine motif. The chaste aquamarine bracelet, the banquet rings, and a score of new necklaces, are worthy examples of the goldsmith's art, and they who take time to visit the exhibition this month have a genuine artistic treat in store for them.

Mr. Peters's Moonlights.

The eighteen pictures that Charles Rollo Peters has sent down to us from Santa Barbara, and which are now being shown at the Gould gallery, are the brilliant work of a suave and facile magician of the brush. They strike one at times, indeed, as being almost too well done. They lay themselves open to the charge of cleverness—due, no doubt, to the fact that they are all moonlight effects, and that Mr. Peters, from long practice, has learned to do them with wonderful ease.

The theme that Mr. Peters has chosen to give, with many variations, is a peculiarly difficult one, and he has leaped over all obstacles with great daring and originality.

He is simple almost to the point of baldness, yet he is so inspiringly big in impression and feeling that he makes us believe that a few added statements would have been an impertinence.

He handles paint with the masterful directness of Winslow Homer, and with the same fine disregard of non-essentials. The result is something big and epic—perhaps even a little theatrical—and almost never gently lyrical. His color is rich and fluent, at times vividly opalescent, as in the moonlit walls of his "Casa Soberanes."

Mr. Peters has made a number of studies of the ruins of San Francisco by moonlight, the most striking of these being "Portal of the Past," the pillars of the Towne house, opposite Huntington and Crocker streets, on Nob Hill; "Refugee Camp," in which the light that falls on the house that crowns the hill is wonderfully well painted, and "Guardian of Nob Hill," a broken stone lion outside the Collis P. Huntington house.

It seems to me, however, that his less ambitious canvases are his best: "San Juan Souvenir," "San Francisquito," "The Windmill" and the exquisite "Warren's Home," which reminds one of some of Whistler's Nocturnes. I cannot explain why, unless it is that their resemblance lies in the sentiment, for subject and treatment are very different.

"By Monterey Bay" is another richly beautiful canvas, with superb sweeping lines. Mr. Peters' compositions, indeed, are always full of rhythm, and are never hackneyed. This picture took the first prize of $500 at an exhibition of the Lotus Club, in New York, a first medal at the Salmagundi, and first medals at Buffalo and Cincinnati.

Lovers of what is good and mature and inspiring in painting should not neglect the opportunity to see these pictures.

At Steckel's Gallery.

A quiet, unpretentious, yet thoroughly satisfying exhibition is that of the two friends, Mary Harland and Lida Price, now being held at the Steckel gallery. There is only one canvas of any size, Miss Price's "Young Girl in White." The rest are sketches in oils and water colors, pencil drawings and miniature.

The "Young Girl in White," which was shown in the Paris Salon of 1905, is a well painted picture; a trifle academic, perhaps, because Miss Price's study time was so close at hand. But it shows a fine feeling for values, and it has naïveté and sentiment.

Many of Miss Price's pencil drawings, touched here and there with red and white chalk, are delightful, "Boy With an Orange," "The Mystic," "Yvonne," "A Little Maid of Sonoratown," "Seen on the Boulevard," etc. They are well drawn, and have character. Of her sketches in oils, among the best are "Gray Day, Luxembourg Garden," and "A Quiet Retreat" and "The Village Street," both of which were painted at Apernon, a sleeping town without a railroad, only forty miles from Paris.

Miss Harland's best work is in miniature portraits, though she also shows a few good landscape sketches in water colors, "A By-street, Honfleur," "The Bathing Place," "An Autumn Afternoon," etc.

Three of the miniatures now shown have been exhibited elsewhere before: "Madame R.," at the Salon of 1905; "Daphne," at the Royal Academy of 1905, and the beautifully painted "Italian Fisherman," at the Academy and the Salon of 1905. In most of these Miss Harland shows good color, exceptionally good drawing, and a strong appreciation of the character of her sitter. Small as the pictures are, they are treated with breadth and freedom. Note the grace and distinction of the "Florentine Youth," the beautiful dignity of "Madam R.," the richness of color of the "Italian Fisherman."

Miss Harland also made, while in Paris, a few miniature copies of celebrated portraits, and these are on exhibition at Steckels, "Vandyke," by himself, and "Daughter of Louis XIV," by Toque, are especially rich in color.

ART NOTES.

On the 21st of February an exhibition of the recent work of John W. Nicoll, in landscape and marines, opened in the Nicholson gallery in Pasadena, to continue for two weeks. Mr. Nicoll has lived in Pasadena for many years, and his work is well and favorably known both in that city and in Los Angeles.

The pictures of Charles Rollo Peters will be shown at Gould's till the end of the month. Leonard Lester will follow with landscapes, many of them of great charm and beauty. Mr. Lester is a poet in paint whose moonlight scenes are especially well done.

Julia Bracken Wendt will leave for Chicago on the first of March, to be gone for two months. While there she will model a bust of Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson. In the meantime, William Wendt and Elmer Wachtel will go on a sketching tour together, and the studio on Sichel street will be occupied by Nona White, the critic and painter.

Hobart Bosworth has arrived from Tempe, Ariz., to become stage manager of the Belasco Theater. Mr. Bosworth, who is a member of the Painters' Club, will still take the time from his managerial duties to wield the brush, as heretofore. He is a man of various talents, who has won an enviable name as an actor, but his real love lies in the direction of painting.

Harold Coffman, the well-known newspaper artist, who was formerly with The Times, but who has been on the Philadelphia Enquirer for the past two years, has returned to Los Angeles. He will join the staff of The Times once more.

The Arts and Crafts holds its regular monthly meeting tomorrow evening at No. 321 South Hill street. There will be an exhibition of wood carving.

Jamestown Exposition Will Be Unique Affair.

Recalling Many Events In History of Nation.

Navies of World to Anchor in Hampton Roads.

BY SMITH D. FRY.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

It seems somewhat strange that "Pocahontas Point" has never been given more than a local reputation by the numerous scribes and literary folk of this now somewhat ancient part of the new world.

The authorities in charge of and directing the great Jamestown Exposition have adopted as their official emblem a picture of King Powhatan, with his beautiful daughter, the Princess Pocahontas, on "Pocahontas Point" viewing the arrival of the first white settlers of the new world as they came across Hampton Roads in their venturesome and exceedingly frail craft.

"Pocahontas Point" is on the northeast bank of the James, where, with its seven miles of width, the river sweeps with quiet dignity and majesty into historic Hampton Roads. Along the shore from "Pocahontas Point" to the northward there is an unusual depth of water; a natural anchorage. Here it was that the United States men-o'-war were anchored in 1862, when the invincible ironclad Merrimac slowly and deliberately crossed the river, ignoring a hail of shot that would have destroyed any wooden vessel; until she came with her irresistible steel prow and crushed the massive oaken hull of the Congress, and then with red-hot shot destroyed the Cumberland.

Within the last fifteen years along this northeast shore of the James River, beginning at "Pocahontas Point," a singular sight has been seen. An enterprising man of force and foresight invested $20,000,000 in the erection and development of a great shipbuilding plant, with three of the largest dry docks in the world. About this plant there has grown like magic a city of 40,000 inhabitants. It has its name drawn from history.

Although the Jamestown Exposition is in celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the English settlement on Jamestown Island, it is not being celebrated on that island, nor in its immediate neighborhood. Jamestown Island is up the James River, thirty miles from "Pocahontas Point" and Hampton Roads. While the colonists under command or direction of Capt. John Smith were in dire straits for good news from England was brought to them by Capt. Christopher Newport; and he was met with his good news by one of Capt. John Smith's little sloops in the vicinity of "Pocahontas Point." On account of this historic incident, when Collis P. Huntington established the ship-building plant and foresaw the growing city, he named it Newport News.

JAMESTOWN ISLAND DESOLATE.

While residing in Washington City before coming to this locality the writer was under the impression that the Jamestown Exposition was to be held at Jamestown. But, as a matter of fact, Jamestown Island is almost entirely destroyed by the relentless erosion of the James River. It is an awfully desolate place. The Federal government is saving the island from entire destruction, by building around it a scientific system of breakwaters.

The celebration of the anniversary of the date of the historical settlement on Jamestown Island is being held on the south side of Hampton Roads directly opposite "Pocahontas Point," and is practically in the location which was occupied by the vessels of the venturesome British when they were first discovered from "Pocahontas Point" by King Powhatan and his afterwards famous daughter, the Princess Pocahontas.

Foremost among the exposition attractions will be a water belt line that will maintain a regular schedule of steamers around and about the waters of Hampton Roads and the adjoining tributaries that go to make up the famous "Tidewater Virginia." A belt line on land, with steam or trolley cars, is familiar to almost every city, but a water belt line, operating steamers instead of cars, is a novel system of transportation.

NAVIES OF ALL NATIONS.

Owing to the fact that this will be the first celebration ever held on deep water, there will be assembled in Hampton Roads the greatest naval pageant that the world has ever seen. The assembled navies of all of the nations, at anchor in the spacious harbor in front of the exposition grounds, will include every type of war craft, from the smallest and most obsolete gunboat to the largest and most formidable man-of-war, affording a splendid opportunity for the comparison of the naval strength of the various countries and to note the progress in naval construction from its earliest stages.

No section of the country is more hallowed by history-making events than that part of Virginia on Hampton Roads, whose shores are lined with historic points of interest. Foremost among these landmarks is "Old Point Comfort," so named by the first settlers because of the safe anchorage afforded by its protected shores for their storm-tossed vessels. Here is also located Fort Monroe, the chief artillery station of the United States government on the Atlantic. With its grim old walls and winding moat, Fort Monroe is the most picturesque military post in the country.

Yorktown, where Cornwallis surrendered to the Continental army, is only a two hours' ride, either by boat or train. Here can be seen the monument erected by the government in honor of the great victory of the American forces. The first customhouse ever erected in America is also located at Yorktown. Within a stone's throw of the exposition site can be seen the remains of the earthworks thrown up by the Confederate army in their defense against the Union troops in the battle of Sewell's Point.

BOSTON'S PROTEST.

With an evident intention of doing the Jamestown Exposition a friendly turn, in connection with the protest made by way of Boston, against the prominence of the military feature, a Buffalo newspaper has put forward an explanation, which shows that paper to be laboring under misapprehension of a sweeping and serious nature:

"Jamestown managers admit that they had hardly anything to work on except military and naval display when they began their enterprise of an exposition in honor of the three hundredth anniversary of the first settlement of Virginia. There was no Jamestown left on earth. It was a name and nothing more. It had not a structure standing, not an inhabitant, and not a dollar to put into the scheme and attract other dollars from State and national treasuries. Since there were no advantages on land, and nothing there on which to found a fair, the water alone was left, and the idea of a naval demonstration preceded all other notions to get the enterprise afloat.

"The rest followed. Modest buildings are going up for the exposition of peace and industry, and visitors will be cared for suitably when they arrive on the historic spot. At least that is the expectation of the management, even if southern hotels are apt to be disappointing in some particulars. But surely it was not from leaning to a display of the war feeling that so much space was given to a warlike programme in preparing the exposition. It was necessity, not preference, that governed the course of the promoters of the affair."

No wonder the paper was skeptical about the facilities, imagining as it does, that the exposition is to be held at Jamestown, and that the millions of visitors are to be housed around that ruin. The exposition was planned from the first to be held on Hampton Roads, the greatest marine roadstead in the world, just outside of the city limits of Newport News.

That is to say, the tercentenary is to be held in the community including the cities of Portsmouth and Newport News, and the towns of Hampton and Old Point, which had many fine hotels before the exposition was thought of, and have been building more ever since. The site of the exposition is the most accessible, by rail and water, in the United States.

ITS HISTORICAL APPEAL.

In its naval and military display the Jamestown Exposition, owing to the advantages of its site, will be unique; and for the same reason it will be peerless in its historical appeal. The battleships, cruisers and other war craft of the navies of the world will be anchored along the water front where the Monitor and Merrimac had their terrific struggle for the mastery.

You must remember that the first day that the Merrimac came out, she destroyed the wooden men-of-war Congress and Cumberland, in the James River, west of "Pocahontas Point" and close along that shore. That night the little Monitor came into Hampton Roads, near Fort Monroe, eight miles away, and the second day's fighting of the Merrimac, which was the first day's fighting of the Monitor, occurred in Hampton Roads, along a course five miles in length, south and east of "Pocahontas Point."

Some good people, earnest people, sincere people, have publicly protested against this naval display, on the ground that it will tend to develop a warlike spirit and purpose. They are entitled to their opinions, and they have a right to demand that their views be respected. All humane people are intelligent, and they will therefore admit that folks who think otherwise have a right to their opinions, and a right to demand that their opinions be respected.

NAVY CONSERVES PEACE.

The narrator has seen more than a generation of life in the swirl of national politics, mingling with representative men of all nations; and his conclusion is that the powerful navy of the United States is a great conservator of the peace of the world; and, along that line of thinking, he intensely believes that this naval display will cause all of the nations to ponder long before they enter upon the always disastrous and always un-Christian resort to war, for the settlement of international misunderstandings and animosities.

But, after all, that subject is what the lawyers term "allunde." The celebration of this three hundredth anniversary of a notable event will occur as planned, and every visitor will have his or her opinion of the propriety of it, also individual views concerning the worthiness or unworthiness of the methods employed, as well as concerning the work of the eminent and capable gentlemen and ladies who have participated in the production of the fairyland which has grown deftly and rapidly into radiantly beautiful and attractive expositions of our industries and arts.

GLIMPSES OF BRIGHT LIGHTS.

Senator Stephen B. Elkins is a fortunate man. He has great wealth, political power and prestige—almost everything to make his lot enviable. Just how fortunate he is was graphically described by one of the Democratic members of the West Virginia Legislature that reflected the Senator the other day, in a speech that has furnished Senator Elkins's Washington friends no end of material for jests at his expense.

This Democratic Solon of West Virginia, naturally enough, could not display any great enthusiasm over the reelection of Senator Elkins—he wanted to see a Democrat don the Senatorial toga. But he could see where Senator Elkins was to be congratulated, so he made a speech along that line. His eloquent peroration, according to the Washington version, was something after the following:

"Stephen B. Elkins is a fortunate man; he should be a happy man, and I doubt not that he is. He looks on the rugged hills and mountains of West Virginia, with all their hidden treasures, and on the sun-kissed and fruitful valleys of this great State, and a smile of ineffable contentment illumines his face. And why shouldn't he smile? He owns them.

"He looks on the great railroads that span the State, with their freight trains laden with the products of a busy people, and again he smiles. And why shouldn't he smile? He owns them.

"He looks on this Legislature, met here to elect a Senator of the United States, and once more he smiles. And why shouldn't he smile? He owns it!"

Senator Beveridge of Indiana likes to make a speech when the spirit moves him, and it is well known that he can make a good one on almost any occasion. At a recent dinner in Washington the post-prandial oratory took such a turn that the spirit moved the Hoosier statesman. He wanted to make a speech, and the more he listened to the eloquence of others, the more intense grew his desire to contribute to the discussion.

Turning to his neighbor at the table, Scott C. Bone, the editor of the Washington Herald, Senator Beveridge exclaimed, sotto voce:

"Scott, if I don't get to make a speech here tonight I'll die!"

Mr. Bone knew that the programme did not include a call on the Indiana Senator.

"If it's as bad as that with you, Albert," he replied, "you'd better prepare to meet your God."

The River and Harbor Appropriation Bill, which has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate, carries appropriations aggregating considerably more than $83,000,000, marking it as the biggest "pork barrel" Congress has ever considered. Some members of both houses failed to get as big a slice of this "pork" as they wanted, and efforts have been made to amend the measure, which has aroused fears that the entire bill might be defeated. A solicitous member from Pennsylvania expressed this fear to Senator Knox.

"There's not the slightest danger of the bill's being defeated," replied Senator Knox, gravely. "On the contrary, there are more than eighty-three million reasons why the bill will be passed."

Speaking of Senator Knox, the Pennsylvania statesman has demonstrated that he knows how to accept the inevitable gracefully. Incidentally he has established a valuable precedent for parents who have to reconcile themselves to elopements.

Senator Knox's son, Reed, eloped a few nights ago with a Miss McCook, one of Washington's beauties, and the Senator was besieged the next day by reporters eager to know whether he would play the role of the stern and unforgiving parent, or extend a paternal benediction to the happy couple. Senator Knox dictated the following statement:

"Senator Knox finds that he has acquired a charming daughter-in-law overnight, without the trouble incident to the conventional wedding."

Former Gov. Myron T. Herrick of Ohio, the State where there is always "something doing" in politics, came down to Washington last week and submitted to an interview in which he took occasion to heave a brick at the devoted head of Senator Joseph Benson Foraker. The ex-Governor said in substance that the Senator's opposition to certain of President Roosevelt's policies was not surprising because the Senator had maintained a consistent record of being "eternally agin" all Republican administrations, State or national.

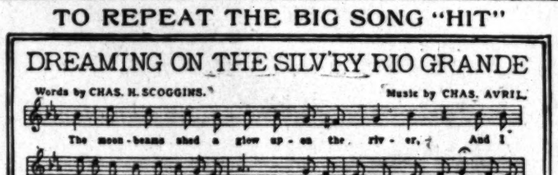
That sent the correspondent to Foraker, to learn what the Senator who has established a reputation as the most ardent fighter in public life would have to say in reply to his distinguished fellow-Ohioan.

"I have just three words to say," said Foraker. "De mortuis nil" (of the dead nothing.)

"Won't you add 'nisi bonum' (but good) to complete the quotation?" the Senator was asked.

"De mortuis nil," repeated the Senator, with emphasis.

TO REPEAT THE BIG SONG "HIT"



In response to the big demand to hear again the new ballad, "Dreaming on the Silv'ry Rio Grande," with which Tracy McDermott, the leading man, scored such a big success a few weeks ago at Fischer's Theater, the management has consented to have it repeated the week of Feb. 25th. This ballad, by the writers of "Where the Silv'ry Colorado Wends Its Way," is making the "hit" of the year and it is worth a trip to the theater just to hear McDermott sing it in his own inimitable way. There is something so appealing about the sweet melody that it is impossible to resist it when once it is heard. The title page of this song is a reproduction in twelve colors of Moran's celebated painting of the Mount of the Holy Cross and it is undoubtedly one of the most beautiful ever published. It is for sale at all music and art stores, and from the way it is taking it is going to be the biggest seller of the year in Los Angeles.

Last Week.

Right of the Lenten season has hushed the social life of the city the week, and though there have been pleasant informalities and some handsome receptions and teas, on the whole has rather been dull.

Quite a surprise was the wedding Miss Molly Stark, a popular girl who recently come here from San and has made many friends, to Mr. Breeden of Salt Lake City. Saturday afternoon Mrs. J. Mrs. Donaldson's Luncheon.

Mrs. W. Duncan of No. 762 Garland avenue, after an extended European trip, celebrated her return with an elaborate luncheon. Covers were laid for eighteen and guests were Mmes. Earl Merry, Eliza Averill, Reehl of Ohio, Francis Brill, Henry Whittier, Henry Edson Small, Sealy Mudd, Maricy Welsh, William Durham, J. W. Harris, Isaac Collins, H. W. Myers and the Misses Lela Milligan, Myers, Jane Collins and Robertson. The decorations in the dining-room were flags collected abroad. Under the electrolier was a huge ball of red filled with tiny flags of all the foreign nations. The flowers used in table decorations were red and white carnations. Our American flag was conspicuous, unfurled over the huge fireplace. The reception hall was in yellow acacia, while the drawing-room was resplendent in pink carnations. Place cards were unique, representing a ship in the distance, bearing them away to foreign lands, while a locomotive in the foreground was bringing them back. After luncheon, a guessing contest of the heads of foreign countries was played, and the prize was a hand-painted plate. The hostess wore a Paris gown of black satin and chiffon, with real lace trimmings.

S.M. Club Entertained.

Mrs. J. Wesley Sprague of No. 1740 Harvard boulevard entertained the members of the S. M. Club yesterday afternoon for her sister, Miss Clara Park, who is a member.

The handsome new home was attractively decorated, and the whist tables were arranged down the length of the long living-room. Over each table was hung a basket of pink sweet peas and ferns, and the hall was decked in greens and palms. The Ladies' Venetian Orchestra discoursed sweet music, and prizes were hand-painted china. Mrs. Catesby Thorn and Miss Ethel Graham assisted the hostess in entertaining.

Late in the afternoon a number of young bachelors dropped in for tea.

The hostess, gowned in pale blue velvet and lace, was assisted in receiving by Mrs. W. H. Harrison and Misses Harriet Johnson, Nellie McPherrin and Mary Olcott. Punch was served on a large mirror table spread with delicate sprays of asparagus ferns, and over which fairy lamps swung. Misses Louise Hill and Pearl Burnham presided there. In the drawing-room, where the receiving party stood, peach and almond blossoms formed a charming background for the beautiful gowns worn. The dining-room was in yellow jonquils and other flowers of the same hue, which contrasted pleasingly with the dull blue of the hangings and walls. The wide veranda was canvased and hung with the red grapevines and lanterns and the Venetian Orchestra discoursed music from a bower of ferns and palms.

Miss McLachlen Engaged.

Interesting news to many friends in this city and also in El Paso, Tex., is the engagement of Miss Bonnie Adele McLachlen to John Archibald Vaughan, which is announced today, by the mother of the bride-elect, Mrs. Evelyn McLachlen. The marriage is to take place next month. The bride is a Texas beauty, and has only lived here for a short time with her mother, but in that time has become a social favorite.

Prominent Visitors.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Jones of Tacoma, Wash., have been at the Alexandria for some time accompanied by Mrs. Jones's sister, Miss Anna H. Tobey, and by her niece, Miss Anna Stickney. They have visited all points of interest and spent some time at Hotel Green, Pasadena. Mr. and Mrs. Jones spend part of each winter here for pleasure and recreation and usually bring several friends with them. Mr. Jones is a millionaire, being connected with some of the largest lumber companies in the West, one in which the late W. H. Perry was interested. They are warm personal friends of the Perry's and Mr. and Mrs. Modini-Wood. Miss Tobey is the eldest daughter of the late Hon. G. G. Tobey, of the famous Tobey Homestead of Jay Essax county, New York. This estate contains many hundreds of acres of well-cared for grounds, and is one of the most romantic and picturesque landmarks of the famous summer resort of Northern New York, nestling as it does, at the foot of the Adirondack Mountains and overlooking the Ausable River. Mrs. Jones and Miss Tobey have traveled extensively, spending a year in Europe and taking the Mediterranean trip and visiting the Holy Land. Later they made the trip to Honolulu, Manila and Japan. Miss Stickney is a sweet young brunette with a wealth of wavy hair, and is a finished elocutionist. They have been cordially entertained during their visit. Mr. and Mrs. Modini-Wood of St. James Park giving a dinner for them and Mrs. Crane of Hotel Leighton also entertained them at dinner. Mrs. H. C. Shelton entertained them at tea and Mrs. M. G. Lobdell gave them a box party at the Auditorium, followed by a dinner at Levy's. Mrs. Lobdell's childhood home joins the Tobey homestead. Miss Wade a Pretty Bride.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Wade of No. 811 Lake street was the scene of a wedding, charming in appointment, on Thursday evening, their daughter, Miss Annie Louise Wade becoming the bride of Wiley Vance Ambrose, with Rev. William Horace Day officiating. The popular wedding marches were played by Lowinsky's Orchestra, and soft music through the ceremony. The home was beautifully decorated to represent a peach garden, and the couple stood beneath an arbor of peach blossoms and asparagus ferns. Four doves were suspended from the canopy by baby ribbons, and a lovers' knot of pale pink tulle was directly over the heads of the couple. All the downstairs was banked with potted plants and peach blossoms, and between the rooms were arranged portieres of plumosus and peach blossoms, and in the parlor Easter lilies and greenery were combined. The bridal feast was served in a large tent in the garden, and it was decorated with ferns and many electric lights. The bridal table bore a centerpiece of Easter lilies and ferns and gauze ribbons and small cake boxes adorned with sketches of lilies were souvenirs. The other tables were adorned with enchantress carnations. Wolfskill was in charge of the decorations.

The bride was a girlish picture of beauty clad in a long robe of white satin trimmed with real lace and her long tulle veil was fastened with lilies-of-the-valley, and she carried a shower of the same blossoms. Mrs. Richard Heiman, Jr., who was matron of honor, wore her own wedding gown of white satin, trimmed with point de Venise lace, and carried a shower of maiden-hair ferns tied with pale green tulle. With the ladies of the Magnolia-avenue Church acting as patronesses, with Mrs. Robert Butcher as chairman, Miss Mabel Madeline Mosher gave an interesting recital last week at Henderson Hall. She was assisted by Mrs. J. J. Abramson, soprano; Miss Nannie Clayton, pianist, and Prof. Valentine, violinist.

Miss Mosher displayed much talent and versatility, being especially strong in the heavier work. Her presentation of Ingomar was especially fine. Miss Mosher is a graduate of Drake University of Des Moines, and studied for a year abroad. She has come here to make her home and is an acquisition.

of girlish beauty, clad in a golden yellow gown, which harmonized pleasingly with her lovely Titian hair, and she sang exquisitely. The affair was given at the Gamut Clubhouse by Mr. Janotta, and society was there in force. Miss Herron is one of the season's popular débutantes. She was suffering from a severe cold, but the effect was scarcely noticeable in her singing. Her voice is a lyric soprano, of sweetest quality, and strong in the upper register, with exquisite liquid flow. It gives evidence of much training, and her management of it is most artistic. It evinced the hard work which Miss Herron has done, and, indeed, it is unusual that a society girl should find time outside of her duties to make so much of her talents.

The programme given was highly classical, showing the young singer's versatility. She was assisted by Miss Orrie M. Coons, pianist; Clarence W. Reynolds, baritone; Natorp Blumenfeld, violinist, and Miss Estelle Heart, contralto. Among other numbers, Miss Herron sang Gounod's "Romeo et Juliet" with fine understanding, and rose to the dramatic climax most artistically. Mr. Reynolds and Miss Herron sang a duet from "Rigoletto" and a number of Chaminade's and Massanet's songs.

Miss Rowland Becomes Bride.

Thursday evening a wedding, simple in appointment, was solemnized at Hotel St. Francis, Miss Etta M. Rowland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Rowland, of Lanark, Ill., becoming the bride of Hewitt R. Taylor, Jr., a young business man of this city, who came from Des Moines, Iowa. Rev. Mr. Cline, a friend of both families, performed the ceremony, in the presence of about twenty-five relatives and friends. Supper was served at Hotel Gilliam. Miss Hazel Fisher of Jonesville, Wis., furnished the music. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are away on a short trip, and after March 14 will be at home at No. 212 North Grand avenue.

Mrs. Brauer's Party.

In honor of her cousin, Mrs. Regina Brauer, of Philadelphia, who is spending the winter here, Mrs. A. K. Brauer of No. 2129 West Twenty-first street entertained on Friday afternoon with a George Washington whist party. The home was decorated in the national colors, and great flags were looped over the mantel and doorways. George Washington's picture occupied a conspicuous place, surrounded by the Stars and Stripes, and score cards were in the form of tiny hatchets. Guests for the afternoon were: Mmes. E. A. Howard, J. G. Hanst, Lewis Clark Carlisle, Fred Detmers, Samuel W. Schenck, Ed Zobelein, Frank Hudson, Albert Russell, Lee C. Gates, A. V. Peacock, W. R. Davis, Beatty, Herzog, Frank Goings, H. C. Krohn, E. F. Miss Howland Engaged.

Miss Ethel Howland, whose engagement to H. B. Androus of Pomona has been announced, is being charmingly entertained by her many friends, and recently was guest of honor at a handkerchief shower given by Mrs. Charles J. Haines of Leoti avenue. Miss Howland is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William P. Howland of No. 1147 Hobson street, and the wedding is to take place soon. She is a bright, brown-eyed girl with a winsome vivacity.

Whistlers Give Music.

The whistling musicale with which Miss Agnes Woodward entertained on Thursday evening was a distinct success, and adds a new phase of music to the already long list. Miss Woodward herself is a past master of the art of whistling and gave some delicately pretty numbers. Miss Modie, who whistled "Cavalleria Rusticana" with 'cello obligato, by Mme. Menasco, displayed excellent training, and her clear, birdlike notes were a delight. None of the whistling pupils have studied more than nine months, and the results gained were most gratifying to the teacher. Miss Marie Thomas, recently of Italy, was much appreciated, her mezzo-contralto voice being deep, rich and full. Vernon Bettin, the boy soprano, was roundly applauded, and all the participants were showered with flowers.

MISS BONNIE ADELE MCLACHLEN, charming Texas girl, whose engagement to John A. Vaughan is announced today.

Reception of Spring Fashions At The Unique

TOMORROW---MONDAY

THIS will be a real fashion feast that no style-loving woman within reach of the Unique can afford to miss. We're enthusiastic and no wonder. The great fashion artists of New York and abroad were never so magnificently represented in Los Angeles as they will be at the Unique tomorrow. We invite you to come.

We herewith reproduce a letter received from our resident New York buyer which we believe you will appreciate. It tells you just what you want to know about styles that are the vogue in New York and Newport. The styles that will be worn this coming season--the styles that you will see at the Unique.

The Unique Cloak and Suit House,
Isaacs Bros Co., Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen: The season here has opened with such a lavish display of beautiful things that I am almost at a loss what to write you. One must see these garments to appreciate their beauty. First, a word about styles. For street wear, mornings, the smart tailored suits in hip length coats and the very new tailored princess are of course the correct and only thing worn by the well dressed New Yorker. The colors are mostly light and are in checks, stripes and fancy mixtures. The materials are light weight suitable for tailored gowns.

For afternoon gowns, calling, matinee and reception--the favored materials are voile, chiffon voile, marquisette and fancy silks--all in dainty shades such as champagne, light blue, peach, mulberry, etc. The models of these pretty gowns may be either princess, or the still popular Eton suit. The coat may be a trifle longer or shorter than last season and the sleeves are greatly changed. The Mandarin sleeve is one of the newest effects. The clever little Eton coat, so becoming and convenient remains unchanged.

To wear with this suit you have a superb selection of waists in hand made laces, nets, chiffons, fine hand embroidered batistes, lingerie, and many other elegant styles.

For evening and dinner gowns I have selected a number of imported models such as I should not have dreamed of sending you other years, but the liberal patronage of our Los Angeles customers during the past few seasons has inspired me to send these very exclusive and more expensive garments to you.

The evening coats are certainly very beautiful and practical, too. And by the way, I must mention the pongee coats. They are very highly favored. Can be worn for any occasion from a theater party to an auto tour, and the make of these coats is far ahead of anything I have found here other years.

Capes are much in vogue for street and automobiling and it is predicted they will be highly favored for autumn wear. The different styles I have sent you are really very attractive, not only in the street shades, but also in the evening shades as well.

I must not omit mention of the separate skirts. Next to the ever popular and uselul black skirt, of which you have all kinds, there is probably nothing smarter than the pleated pongee skirts, in white, light blue and modes, unless it might be the little checked taffetas which I expressed you today.

Linen and lingerie stuffs are to be a very important factor in my lady's wardrobe this year. The lingerie frocks are beauties, all fine dainty lace, tucks and hand embroidery. I have sent an unusual number to you for they are so very good for almost any occasion. The linens I have sent you are also very lovely. Hand crochet and lace are in great profusion.

I have tried to select things that would launder successfully and give good service.

I am enclosing descriptions of a few of the garments I am sending you for your opening.

Yours truly,
J. J. F.

The Unique is the only house in the West that retains a buyer in New York the year around. This buyer is a student of style—living constantly in direct touch with the very pulse of the fashion world.

This Princess costume is from Drecoll, Paris. It is of heavy champagne colored silk combined with Arabian lace, which forms a panel motif from the shoulder to the hem of the skirt. It will be on exhibition at the Unique.

This gown was copied from the original worn by the Queen of Spain. It is of meteor crepe in a beautiful shade of daffodil yellow. The waist is hand embroidered in gold with just a touch of old blue here and there. To be worn with this gown is a handsome cavalier cape in heavy black silk. Very chic.

These Garments Will be on Display

A WHITE CHIFFON PRINCESS, FROM PAQUIN, Paris. Hand painted in the palest shades of pink roses with real lace inset through the design, which is outlined by a hand painted design in black. This beautiful creation is made over white taffeta and white chiffon and finished at the bottom of skirt with wide tucks.

A COSTUME OF DAINTY BLUE METEOR CREPE ---comes from the Callot Seours. Waist is covered with self tone embroidery and silver spangled lace; the skirt falls in sweeping lines and is finished at the bottom with circular folds of crepe.

A WHITE CHIFFON GOWN FROM PAQUIN. THE waist is an artistic combination of embroidered crepe, tulle and real lace. The skirt falls in graceful lines from an Empire back. Has an inset of embroidered crepe and real lace in a shaped flounce at the bottom.

A RICH SILK COAT FROM PAQUIN IN AMBER color. Artistically combined with amber colored lace, white chiffon and a tiny bit of gold.

FICTION.

Weyman.

THE BOROUGH. By Stanley J. Weyman. D. Appleton & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

"The Borough" is in Stanley Weyman's more serious mood, and in many qualities, far above the majority of the novels of the day. In a manner a historic romance, dealing with the great English events of 1821, and with the political events that clustered about the throne. In the story is written entirely in modern style, giving no hint of Weyman's swashbuckling methods, in work on which Mr. Weyman has evidently labored long and diligently, and it is well put together and strong in all parts. Although it has a somewhat British length, it is not tedious nor wearisome, on the contrary the interest is so sustained that one would not have it shorter. A few cuts might be made, perhaps, on the author's inclination to quote poetry rather too much, instead of relying upon his own prose powers; but one must look over in consideration of the general excellence of the book. It is among the few best novels of the past twelvemonth.

The story is that of a very human love affair between a manly hero, and his idyllic romance with a young lady of a social journey. The girl is plain Miss Smith, teacher in an academy for young ladies, when the story begins, but she turns out, like the heroine of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," to be quite different in the end—heiress to the estate to which the hero looks for his future, and daughter of rank on marriage. The romantic interest in this old tragedy, with a willful beauty as its central figure itself into the happier ending, adding to and almost doubling the interest of this. The love story is very good, and the story as a whole makes a strong impression of reality.

A GENTLEMAN OF MILAN. By Marjorie Bowen. Lothrop Publishing Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

"A Gentleman of Milan" is a very remarkable book, in consideration of the fact that its author is a young girl—according to the publishers—it will rank well, even with due reminding of that fact. It is a love romance, the scene laid in Italy, with Gian Galeazzo Visconti of Milan, as its central figure. Miss Bowen's English is occasionally faulty, and the story trenches on melodrama and yet, take it for all in all, it holds the interest with a well-handled action, and its plot hinge on brutal actualities at times. Those who do not like their feelings harrowed up should not read it.

THE PRINCESS COMPANY, LTD. By Richard Harding Davis. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. (Price $1.50.)

A one plot tale, without large scope and yet entertaining to readers of a strictly modern and somewhat formed for the purpose of extracting the money of the reader. It is in the methods of doing that the interest lies; but the secret of these must be left to the reader, as to disclose them would spoil the story.

THE HOUSE OF HONOR. By Mary Catherine Lee. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. (Price $1.50.)

The author of "A Daughter of New France" gives us in her new book a charming story of the Patriot War of 1837-38. The plot is commonplace, but well carried out, the action, conversation, and incidents, all fairly good. The book will have many readers, and should sell well.

THE MAKING OF FRIENDSHIP. By George Gibbard. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. (Price $1.50.)

"The Making of Friendship" follows in the wake of Anthony Hope's pseudo-successes. A young Englishman is invited by the monarch of Ruritania to pass a winter with him at court, and here, in court setting, and in sports, a love story develops. The book is in many ways after the manner of "The Prisoner of Zenda," loosely put together, in order to combine romance, outdoor life and the court setting; and the hero is the striving for wit, which stands against good taste and seeming to be tame. The book has plenty of action and interest to while away an idle hour.

THE GUARDED GARDENERS. By Lawrence Mott. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

Some of the monthly magazines are well acquainted with Lawrence Mott's stories of the North. Tales of hunters and trappers; and these have now been gathered into a book. Their scene is commonplace, and the handling ensures that they are strongly dramatic, as they are in Mary E. Wilkins-Freeman's stories, arising in simple incidents of emotional effects. The characters and plot development are exceptionally good. They are among the most striking short stories of the time, and can be warmly recommended.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.

THE LAW. By May Baldwin. J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia.

Hardly believable, this story of a girl whose chief amusement is to believe that she is "a stately, proud creature of a land where nobody else, and everybody happy, and when you do not like it, nobody calls it all wrong and says, it's only pretend," she says, "is a whole, exceptionally true and natural. The young people and she have charming times, and his understanding of eccentricities fortunately comes a better day for her little self. The ending of the story which the author evidently thinks romance was necessary, is as much as the rest, but the story of the dark-eyed Anglo-Saxon quite unique and both humorous. The book is not for all, but those who love it will find it one of the prettiest about them.

THE RISING MEN. By Meredith Nicholson. Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. (Price $1.50.)

Is the keynote of Meredith Nicholson's new book—romance after the manner which Anthony Hope has made a time to write. This is the part of one missing man: and a girl around the world to find him with orchids. The mystery is very one and the mystery brought about much adventure holds the interest. Yet the something of the freshness and of a Thousand Candles, really more even work. It does not so strongly either in plot element or in that of its predecessor. Neither has it so much humor as the earlier book, but that it moves along with greater probability. It is one of the most enter-

The little collection of poems by John Erskine published by John Lane contains many things that are of fair merit, but one or two poems that are of unusual strength and beauty, with occasional verses in others that indicate the author's possibilities when at his best. Mr. Erskine's verse reminds one of Stephen Phillips for its simplicity, its polish and its emotional force; but it has its own spirit, a finer touch, less of unrest, and sometimes even a greater depth than Mr. Phillips's.

Some of the shorter poems are very fine:

"If a star trembles, shaken with the dark,
'Tis thy weak sight that wavers, not the star;
Where the stars shine most clear, fix not thy mark—
The faintest stars nearest to heaven are."

"Now where the angel guards the sacred place
With flaming sword, they came, and in the cease
Of sorrow slowly, wonderingly drew near;
One, with eyes raised to the celestial face,
Knowing it for an angel's, went in peace.
But one beheld the sword, and went In fear."

Of the longer poems, "A Song of Friends," "Winter-song to Pan," parts of "Iphidamus" and "Alma Mater" are strong and original work; but best of all is the longer poem "Acteon" that gives the title to the collection.

"Fair bloomed the happy world, fair bloomed the May,
But over Lethe came no bloom nor change,
Only the ancient languor; soft and smooth,
Save where a slumb'rous poppy, nodding low,
Trailed into ripples, Lethe slipped away;
And there the dead, fresh from the bright world, came,
And drank forgetfulness—one cup for all.
Whether their crown of life were flower or thorn,
But the poem is too long to quote. Some of the lines fall in harmony, though none are commonplace or without cadence, and there is a beauty of the whole not to be summed up by analysis of its parts. Still the versification appears to lack yet a little in maturity, for all its occasional finish and strength. It is supposable that Mr. Erskine will sometime do even better work than this.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

A Young Soldier.

BORN TO THE BLUE. By Florence Kimball Russell. L. C. Page & Co., Boston. (Price $1.50.)

"Born to the Blue" is one of the best of recent stories for boys, and there are some very good stories turned out for boys, nowadays, too. The young hero is a child born in a western fort and reared among all the traditions and customs and perils of army life under these conditions. The manly ideals set before him are of the finest, and the manner in which the boy responds to them sets the best example possible, without any tendency to goody-goodiness. Indeed, the story is full of thrilling action, and will hold the interest of any boy—or, for that matter, of any grown person, either.

Historic Scenes.

RUNNING THE GAUNTLET. By Jessie Peabody Frothingham. D. Appleton & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

"Running the Gauntlet" has for its hero Lieut. William B. Cushing, who did such gallant service in the Civil War; and the story of his deeds reads like a romance. The author of the book has utilized Lieut. Cushing's deeds to the best advantage, turning history into so interesting a tale that it will rank with fiction in holding the attention. The form, indeed, is that of fiction, but the actual events seem to have been carefully followed.

POETRY.

A New Poet.

ACTEON AND OTHER POEMS. By John Erskine. John Lane Company, New York. (Price $1.25 net.)

Poetry is not dead. Among the quantities of light and trivial, even puerile and senseless, verse turned out and often finding publication, there are here and there indications of a new and vital spirit of song—a part of the world's general awakening. Beautiful verse—strong and clear and original—has been written, of late years, by a number of men and women—some of whom have, indeed, accomplished but one or two really good poems; yet if a man give the world but one good piece of verse, has he not done almost enough?

Books On The "Out-Of-Doors"

That season of the year when the "out of doors" will be uppermost in our minds, is rapidly coming upon us. Lucky is he who knows the true meaning of the "out of doors." Still more fortunate is the man, or woman, who has just commenced the study of its wonders. In our stock of books will be found a number devoted to nature—volumes brimful of the fresh air of the open—books that will help you to appreciate that temple of nature—the "out of doors."

The Wild Flowers of California

"The Wild Flowers of California," by Mary Elizabeth Parsons, illustrations by Margaret Warriner Buck, is a book that every lover of nature should have to carry with him into the fields of this land of flowers. For their easy identification and naming, by those not familiar with the science of botany, the flowers are grouped according to color, while the key and descriptions of plant families have been added for those who wish to trace plants more scientifically.

"The Wild Flowers of California" is the final authority upon every known flower of the State. It is the only work of the kind treating of the flora of this region. Price $2.

The Garden Book of California

By Belle Sumner Angier

"The Garden Book of California" was written by Belle Sumner Angier, who has contributed to the daily papers of Los Angeles many studies of nature which have made her well known in her particular field—"out of doors." This is a book for garden makers and home builders. Illustrated and decorated—bound in fine linen. $2.00.

SHEETS OF GOLD WRAPPED BODY.

QUEEN TEIE'S REMAINS WERE REGALLY PRESERVED.

Tomb of Mummy of Famous Egyptian Sovereign Plain Square Sepulcher Out of Rock and Part of It Was Found as Left by Priests.

The London Times, in its article telling of the discovery by Theodore Davis at Thebes, Egypt, of the tomb and mummy of the famous Egyptian Queen, Teie, says the tomb is a plain square sepulchre, cut out of rock. It is approached by a descent of steps, and adjoins the tomb of Rameses IX. Unfortunately the tomb lay in the bed of a water course, and the water has seriously damaged such objects as would be affected.

A part of the tomb was in the same condition as it was when left by the priests amid the throes of a religious revolution which had spent its force before Moses was born. The tomb bears witness to the blind rage of the victorious priesthood of Thebes, and the intensity of their hatred toward the heretic King, whose mother and inspirer was Teie.

The Queen's jewelry and trinkets of solid gold with which the sepulchre were filled, were left untouched.

A huge catafalque, which had been torn to pieces by the priests, had been erected over the mummy of the Queen. It was thickly plated with gold inside and outside, and engraved with the names and title of Teie and her son, as well as representations of their adoration of the solar discus. It is curious that the whole figure of the King had been destroyed while that of his mother had been allowed to remain unharmed.

The coffin is a superb example of jewelry work. The wood of it is entirely covered with a frame of gold inlaid with lapis lazuli, carnelian and green glass. The mummy itself was wrapped from head to foot in sheets of gold. The water, which for so many years had been drained through it, had reduced it to little more than pulp, and it fell to pieces when it was examined in the presence of several Egyptologists on January 25. There were bracelets on the arms and a necklace of gold beads and ornaments of gold inlaid with precious stones round the neck, while the head was still encircled by an object priceless and unique, the imperial crown of the Queens of ancient Egypt. Theodore M. Davis, who made this sensational discovery, is an American. He makes his home in New York and Newport.

Russian Railroad Signals.

At every distance of one verst or two-thirds of a mile, along every Russian railway, there is a bell, which is connected with the others by an electric wire. These bells, or gongs, were put up for the purpose of giving two signals of distress in winter; one signal was that of "snowed up," and the other was "help, help." During the summer this signaling apparatus has not been used much, and now they are to give only one signal—namely, "burglars." When this signal is given, owing to the many attacks being made on Russian railways and railway stations, the nearest telegraph office has to give the alarm to the two nearest stations, so that for a distance of a few miles the entire neighborhood can be surrounded by troops and local policemen.

BRITISH NAVY'S NEW COMMANDER.

ADMIRAL SIR GERARD NOEL.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Feb. 2.—Admiral Sir Gerard Henry Uncted Noel is the new commander-in-chief at the Nore, the naval station nearest the metropolis. In times past, it has been the scene of many attempts to strike a blow at the capital, and the appointment of such a fine type of the old sea dog to such a responsible post is an exceedingly popular one.

Admiral Noel is 62 years old. Like Nelson he is the son of a country parson and was born in Nelson's own country, Norfolk. He had no "pull" to help him along in the navy. He has made his way by merit. While in command of the British squadron in Cretan waters in 1898, he particularly distinguished himself. News reached him of a Moslem rising in Hegalo-Kastrom, where, as a result of Turkish treachery, 100 British soldiers and 1000 Christians lost their lives. Sir Gerald Noel acted with characteristic promptitude. Surrounding the Turkish barracks by a forced night march, he presented an ultimatum to Edhem Pasha, the Turkish leader. His terms were instant surrender or immediate attack. Edhem Pasha sent a messenger suggesting that they should talk things over. The answer he took back was that the British guns would begin to speak in five minutes if the Turkish flag did not come down. Before the five minutes were up, the Ottoman soldiers were stacking their surrendered arms. Seventeen of the ringleaders were hanged in the market place of Candia to teach the Turks proper respect for the power of the "Widder of Windsor." For this exploit Sir Gerard received a knighthood.

Had it not been for the admiral's promptitude in the presence of danger on another occasion, a sad page in the history of the British navy, which is set aside for the mournful story of the Victoria and the Camperdown disaster, would have been sadder still. When the order was given which made a collision between these two ships inevitable, he was commanding the Nile, which was following close in the wake of the Victoria, and Capt. Brackenbury was in charge of the Edinburgh. Had they carried out the order signaled, the Edinburgh and the Nile would have shared the fate of the Camperdown and the Victoria, but at the critical moment Sir Gerald altered the course of his ship and Capt. Brackenbury followed his lead. Like Nelson before them, both disobeyed an order to avert a second disaster.

He Was None to Blame.

When Archie R. Barstow, No. 819 Benson avenue, Evanston, stepped into his home Saturday evening and the strains of "Everybody Works But Father" fell upon his ears he immediately pounced upon the graphophone, smashed it and hurled the pieces into the back yard.

The machine had just been purchased by Mrs. Barstow and when she saw her husband approaching the house she thought to surprise him. Unfortunately, the first record she picked up happened to be the one which affected Mr. Barstow's pride. He has been out of employment for the winter and at once suspected the tune was intended for his special benefit.

Mr. Barstow is an expert mechanic and has always provided for his family and he said he did not want any music machine to cast any aspersions upon him. After Mrs. Barstow had explained that she did not know what record she was placing on the cylinder Mr. Barstow expressed sorrow at his haste and agreed to replace the machine.—[Chicago News.

Good Use for Trolley Wires.

The head of the fire department of Rouen, France, has suggested to the Mayor a novel project in the fire extinguishing service. Inasmuch as the city is traversed everywhere by the electric street car wires, it is suggested that there should be provided pumps, driven by dynamos, to take current by means of trolley hooks attached to street car wires at the nearest point to the fire. The advantages are seen at a glance. The power is unlimited; the motor strength on a 500-volt circuit could do anything with a stream of water. No engines would have to be kept going, and the machinery would be smaller than the great mass of metal that has to be dragged to the scene of a fire.—[New York Tribune.

Burbank Cactus for Fodder.

Experiments just completed by M. E. Jaffa, head of the department of nutrition and foods at the University of California show that a new species of thornless cactus has properties as fodder for cattle which will equal many of the desert grasses. The tests were made at the request of Luther Burbank, the originator of the new species of plant, and have proved to the full the great importance of the new plant as a fodder for cattle in the waste lands. Prof. Jaffa's report on the experiment has just been completed and will be forwarded to Burbank in a few days.

A short time ago five species of the plant were sent to the agricultural station to determine the food value. The series of experiments carried on by Prof. Jaffa show that the new plant carries nutritive powers which equal three-quarters of that of alfalfa.

RATTLER FOR A PET.

Atlantic City's Mayor Startles His Callers and Has a Chance to Work.

Mayor Stoy of Atlantic City has a five-foot rattlesnake as a special pet, and has provided luxurious quarters for it in his private office. The snake has five rattles on the end of its tail, which it rattles joyously at the approach of Mr. Stoy.

Since its arrival several days ago his snakeship has had the run of the Mayor's private room, with the result that everyone excepting the Mayor has given the place a wide berth. The colored janitor has refused to clean the room, and the pretty typewriters have been thrown into a state bordering on hysteria all owing to the freedom with which the snake is allowed to creep about the room.

Mayor Stoy secured his odd pet while on a hunting trip in the South recently. The snake seems to be remarkably intelligent and has learned to come to Mr. Stoy at his call. A favorite haunt for the snake is the top of the Mayor's desk, where it will remain for hours at a time wrapped in a neat coil while His Honor attends to official business. Mr. Stoy says the snake has come to stay.

Ready with a Splendid Gathering New Suits $22.5

"A Little City All By Itself"

"Whenever I come down town I like to shop here, it's so handy. Most everything one could want under one roof. A little city all by itself. If I want to telephone I can telephone here, if I want to send a package by express it's easy for me to use the Wells Fargo express office in the store. If I want to mail a letter, or buy a stamp or money order, or register a package, the postoffice in the rear of the annex saves me lots of time." Part of the conversation of a customer, reported yesterday.

This store is a servant of the public. We like to have everyone feel at home here.

The conveniences in the store are yours.

We are constantly improving stocks in their arrangement and bettering service. Each day gives us new points.

We are just finishing a great expansion movement in which many departments have been moved and enlarged. Muslin underwear and infants' wear are now on the 3d floor. The biggest corset department in the west is now on the third floor, filled with the most healthful, comfortable and stylish corsets in the world. Dress goods and silks and linings have been given practically a whole store all to themselves, in aisles 10 and 11. Men's hats have been moved to the main floor, front of aisles 5, 6, 7 and 8. Women's cloaks, suits, waists, skirts are enjoying greatly increased space on the second floor. New spring styles are flooding in, in all their beauty. Cameras and photo supplies are now on the main floor, and many main floor departments have been strengthened by giving them more room.

Growing! Growing! Growing! And the Broadway will continue to grow, better as well as bigger, just as fast as honest, straightforward, "different" and aggressive merchandising methods will permit. "Don't worry."

Cash and Credit

There are several kinds of CASH PRICES. The most objectionable is where you are asked one price, but where they always NEED THE MONEY and let you have goods for LESS THAN THEY ARE MARKED "because it's YOU." Beware of such a store.

There is only ONE kind of SPOT CASH. That is where all goods are marked in PLAIN FIGURES for SPOT CASH, and where YOU can buy as cheaply as your neighbor. Such a store is BRENT'S—STRICTLY ONE PRICE for SPOT CASH. On CREDIT we add 10 per cent. to our SPOT CASH price. It's the only honest way.

The Gringo in Nippon.

FOREIGN SCHOOL CHILDREN IN JAPAN—HOW THE MIKADO'S GOVERNMENT RESPECTS OUR TREATY RIGHTS.

By Clarence L. Brownell,

(Author of "The Heart of Japan.")

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

ONE of the San Francisco newspapers the other day printed an interview with City Attorney Burke concerning the Japanese school question.

In this interview he was reported as saying that Americans are not allowed to own real property in Japan; that they are only privileged to buy a certain class of securities; they cannot hold Japanese on certain sorts of mortgages; they are not allowed to attend Japanese schools, old or young; they are only permitted to reside in certain sections set aside for them; they are not allowed to sail in a private pleasure boat in certain waters; they cannot leave a treaty port without a permit; they cannot enter any port of Japan (except the regular open ports) from the water front; at the theaters they are charged more than double what Japanese pay for the same accommodations, and hotel charges are on a similar basis; they cannot obtain justice in the lower courts, every case in which a foreigner is involved having to be carried up before justice is given; they pay double the taxes paid by the Japanese.

None of these statements is accurately complete and some of them are wholly untrue. As it reads it singles out Americans and implies that they are discriminated against in Japan. This is quite false. Japan does not discriminate. Her statesmen have been painstakingly correct in their attitude toward foreign countries. To the legal eye of Japan all foreigners look alike. She treats one exactly as she treats another. Take the Russians for instance. They have been unpopular, one might say hated, since 1875, when Russia bulldosed Japan into giving up the Island of Saghalin, but the Japanese have always treated the Russians with courtesy.

I was in Japan when the Czarowitz, now the Czar, was attacked by an insane policeman who believed that the Czarowitz had come to spy out the land, and I saw the nation's heart bleed at the "breach of hospitality" to a guest of Dai Nippon. Its efforts to atone were magnificent.

RESPECTFUL EVER.

I was also in Japan when the Russian Minister, Baron Rosen, left the capital one evening some few days after the beginning of the late war. The crowds that lined the way from the legation to the Shimbashi railroad station was courteously respectful. Though Russian ships had just been sunk there was no exultation. Many in the crowd bowed and those who wore hats took them off as the diplomatic carriage passed. At the Shimbashi railroad station there were troops to give him a military salute. Under similar circumstances what would have been the conduct of a street crowd in New York or in London or say of a Paris foule? I doubt if a crowd in the capital of any other country in the world would have shown the same dignity and consideration.

The Russian missionaries who work in the great Greek cathedral on Surugadai in Tokio were unmolested throughout the war. They remained at their posts and went on with their work quite undisturbed. From any action of the Japanese about them they might not have known that they were living in the midst of a people with whom their country was at war. Not long ago a Russian admiral in the public dining-room of a hotel in Japan felt his dignity offended because a petty officer and some men-of-war's men presumed to enter there and to order food. He demanded that the offender be removed. Such thought and such action on the part of a Japanese admiral is unthinkable. He would rather have sent a bottle of wine to the men and have drunk a toast with them, saying that though they served under different flags they were "fellow sailors and most welcome."

I have heard hard things said about Japan in the foreign community in Yokohama, but that community is not Japan, any more than San Francisco's Chinatown was America. "Knocking" the Japanese is a habit in Yokohama and I believe the knocks may have done much good even when they have been given from mere habit. They have awakened a dormant sense in Japan and her pride will do the rest. Assuredly Japan owes much to the foreigners who live or have lived in her treaty ports and in her capital, but notwithstanding this debt the treaty ports seem hardly to have been fair. I think their example in some ways has not been one for the Japanese to emulate. They have enjoyed for years a police protection for which they did not pay, though their houses could not be searched freely as could the houses of the Japanese, and they were exempt from the direct action of Japanese law. Their own consuls tried them when they broke the laws of the country.

Many foreigners today do not pay the house tax that all Japanese have to pay. They receive all possible protection from the Japanese government but they will not ever fight for it. In this respect they are like the Japanese in California today except that the protection the Japanese government affords is more efficient.

One may mention in passing that for years Japan offered further protection to foreigners and foreign shipping in the way of the best lighted sea coast in the world and collected not one cent in tolls from the foreigners.

HOTEL CHARGES.

As to hotel charges my own experience does not bear out the statement emanating from San Francisco's City Attorney. I have put up at many native Japanese inns. Wherever I was charged more than a native would have been charged it was because I wanted more and got it.

A foreign traveler in Japan is vastly more trouble to a native inn-keeper than is a native traveler. The foreigner, especially the American in Japan, is not a parallel to the Japanese in America, for when a Japanese comes to this country he takes things as he finds them. He has to, and it is no great hardship for him to do so. It is what he expects and he gains in comfort rather than suffers by the differences he adapts himself to.

But the foreigner in Japan, unless he has been put wise, and this means much intelligent instructing and as much intelligent understanding, is often impatient and sometimes inconsiderate. It is difficult if not impossible for him to adapt himself to Japanese conditions. He does not like to sit on the floor, he must have chairs. Now Japanese floors are covered with soft matting, and chairs tear the delicate surface of this matting. So do boot heels, and the foreigner sometimes forgets and wears his boots into the Japanese house.

Then, too, the foreigner does not like to bathe where others bathe. He wishes the bath-house all to himself, and he wishes to bathe in the early morning instead of the late afternoon, which is the time when all Japan bathes.

In short the inn and its order of the day need to be made over and reversed if the foreigner is to receive the accommodation he is accustomed to in his own country. So it is not strange that mine host charges him more.

Travel in Japan is as free to foreigners as to natives. There is no difference in fares on the railways, on the street cars, or in stages. A palanquin bearer or a jin-riki-sha coolie may expect more of a foreign fare. The foreigner weighs many pounds more than the Japanese, on the average, and Japan is a country of mountains where grades are steep. The foreigner is also less patient and less understanding. Often he does not understand at all and his coolie has a sad time trying to explain by gestures and grimaces, rules of the road and customs that, a column might be written upon.

THE FORBIDDEN.

To say that Americans and their pleasure craft are forbidden certain waters of Japan, is to state part of the truth only. Japanese are forbidden just the same. The native sampan has no more privilege than an American yawl. Japan is a multitude of islands, many of which are protected by forts and by submarine mines. Where these things are the Japanese government enforces strict regulations, which are equally for native and foreigner.

The Japanese school question, which, outside of San Francisco is rather a matter of wonder, does not exist in Japan. Japanese schools are free enough. I taught at various times in various schools and colleges in Japan. I never heard of objection to foreigners. The late Lacadio Hearn sent his children to Japanese schools, and a Scotch acquaintance of mine put his child into one to acquire the vernacular. There was no trouble in either case.

The school system is patterned after the American. The Reverend W. Griffis, author of the "Mikado's Empire," the standard work on Japan, laid out the scheme for the Japanese schools and saw it put into efficient effect. Good as it is for the Japanese, I hardly think many of the foreign residents are keen to take advantage of it. They send their children to the excellent mission schools, to private schools, have tutors and governesses for them or send them "home" as the case may be. This is not at all a reflection on Japan's schools. It is a race instinct. Once, for the act of a Japanese, who was then in rebellion against his government, Japan was forced to pay an indemnity to many foreign powers. Later the United States, bearing in mind that the act was that of a rebel, returned this country's share of money with interest. At the suggestion of the American Minister it went to the public school fund, for use throughout the Empire. This fairness made for friendship.

I have seen much of school children both in Japan and in America. I wish the pretty manners of the Japanese were contagious. They are worth "catching," and if they can be caught I advocate exposure.

Courtesy is one of the prime virtues of Japan. Masters of vessels have told me that they have received pleasanter treatment and more consideration from the hands of Japanese inspectors than from any other customs officers in the world. Americans going into Japan will have less difficulty passing the customs there than they will have in passing into their own country on their return. Not only on the border, but all through the country there is courtesy. The police are ubiquitous and their manners never failing. They are a centralized body of which the head is in Tokio, and their attitude towards foreigners is the government's attitude. Time and again I have heard them spoken of as "gentlemen," as by birth many of them are, being samurai and sons of noblemen. Their deportment entitles them to be called such in the American sense—which, after all, is the only sense worth while. Excepting when called to quell a disturbance in some treaty port dive—there are no dives anywhere else in Japan—the Japanese policeman does not address a foreigner without first saluting, and he is often at great pains to help him. He does this as a matter of course, and will not accept a gratuity. I have not heard of him refusing to aid a foreigner, but I have heard the contrary many times.

On two occasions a policeman, thinking I was a tourist, sought to protect me against overcharges that could hardly have amounted to more than a few cents. I do not recall that I have seen a police officer in San Francisco go out of his way to look after the interests of a Japanese. And in Japan let us remember the policeman represents the national government.

LAND HOLDINGS.

Though foreigners cannot obtain absolute title to land in Japan, they may lease it for ninety-nine years. They can build houses, factories and mills on this land, which are as absolutely their property as is possible here in the United States. Foreigners may go where they like except into forts and navy yards, and may live anywhere. They may not own mines, though they may be employed as superintendents, and they are not to go into farming as a business, but any other sort of occupation is open to them as freely as to natives. They may hold chattel mortgages and foreclose them, but if they held mortgages on real estate they could not foreclose. This keeps them from putting money into railways and from making some other investments which are attractive to them. Japan understands what has happened to some of the weaker countries when citizens of stronger countries become heavily interested therein. Christian countries, some one has said, have an appetite for heathen countries, and while heathen is scarcely a word appropriate to Japan, the Japanese government is wise in its generation. It would welcome capital, but it has never had a mind for a protectorate. It declines to be owned by a Morgan, a Rogers or a Rockefeller.

In a word, Japan is not for sale. Her islands are not to become like the Samoan or the Hawaiian islands, nor does she envy the status of Egypt, India or the Transvaal. Japan admits Americans and other foreigners to citizenship. Two notable instances are those of Dr. Virbeck and the late Lafcadio Hearn, both Americans. These men would have achieved distinction in any country. The government of Japan has no desire to unload its surplus population into America. It could have no reason for such a wish. It much prefers Japanese emigrants to settle in Korea and Manchuria, where they are availably near at hand, and remain under the jurisdiction of their home government. Japanese coolies come to California for the very evident reason that they can earn more here than at home. Not one of them has come because his government wished him to. In short, all I can say from my intimate knowledge of Japan is that she is living up both to the letter and to the spirit of her treaty with us. It would seem but fair, therefore, that she should ask us to do the same.

The Dismal Swamp.

The Dismal Swamp is not a swamp at all, according to the usual definition of the term. It stands fifteen or twenty feet higher than the surrounding country, and instead of receiving drainage from rivers is itself a source of supply to various streams, giving them the water its spongy soil catches and holds after rains. There is no decay of vegetable matter of any kind, logs and falling leaves being transformed into peat by the pure water. The purity of the water causes it to keep indefinitely, and it was in great demand in bygone days for the casks of seagoing vessels. The climate is said to be pure and healthful, and on this account planters in olden times were anxious to hire their slaves to lumber contractors working in the swamp.

Circassian Walnut Bedroom Furniture

Among the woods used in the making of modern bedroom furniture, Circassian Walnut figures strongly in point of beauty and service. This rare wood is found only in a small area along the shores of the Black Sea. A peculiar course of handling during the growth of the trees produces a beautiful grain and a quality that is unmatchable. In fact Circassian Walnut is the hardest wood now employed in the making of furniture.

The great factories of America utilize practically the entire output of this small district. We carry the best lines they produce. With all its beauty and quality Circassian walnut furniture is not expensive. A fine Dressing Table may be had for $35.00; Twin Beds for $120; Dressers for $62.50; Chiffoniers for $62, etc.

You will be welcome any time you wish to inspect our stock.

THIS CIRCASSIAN DRESSING TABLE

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Author of "Starting in Life," "The Boy—How to Help Him Succeed," "Gumption," "Dollars and Sense," "Fowler's Cyclopedia of Publicity and Printing," etc.

I asked a number of men of prominent attainment, representing, collectively, practically all of the leading professions, trades, and businesses, to answer the following pertinent question: To what cause, more than to any other do you think is due the majority of failures?

Two hundred and eighty-seven replies were received. The vote was scattering, and did not appear to establish a law of failure-making. However, a condensed recapitulation of the result may not fail to be of practical use to the boy or young man who is broad enough and sensible enough to study and see himself as he studies and sees others, to look upon himself for the time being as an outsider, and to judge himself as he really is; not as he is reflected in his own mirror, but as he is seen in the light of every day.

Eliminating the causes which received but a few votes, the result stood as follows:

Lack of judgment, 36; extravagance, 33; laziness, 27; lack of ability, 23; bad habits, 18; lack of experience, 14; lack of energy, 12; desire to make money fast, 11; carelessness, 11; lack of perseverance, 18; lack of integrity, 12; speculation, 14; dishonesty, 10.

One of our large commercial agencies, which is in a position to statistically judge of cause and result, qualifies the reasons for failure under eleven heads, and places lack of capital at the top, incompetence coming next.

Reliable statistics appear to indicate that insufficient capital and pronounced incompetence cause about 60 per cent. of financial failures, limited, of course, to those who are in business for themselves, and dependent, therefore, upon capital and executive ability for the successful maintenance of their businesses.

The lack-of-capital reason does not, however, apply to those who are upon salaries and who have little or nothing to do with the framing of business policies. In this article I am referring primarily to those who are wage or salary earners, the majority of whom are not likely to work for themselves or to have ownership in any business.

What then, would apear to be the principal cause of failure? My investigations convince me that the majority of failures are not due to any one cause, unless that particular trouble is of consuming volume. For instance, habitual drunkenness operates against any kind of success; laziness, if pronounced and chronic, is sure to invite failure. The majority of boys and men of all ages, while weaker in some direction than in others, have more than one shortcoming, and are incompetent in more than one direction.

Undoubtedly, lack of ability is responsible primarily for failure to make more than ordinary success. It is obvious that no one can rise beyond the limits of his capacity. No matter how hard he may struggle, and no matter what may be his environment or the help that he receives, his capacity draws a line over which he cannot pass. But, nevertheless, the majority of us, whether possessing much or little ability, do not reach the flush of our capacity.

What would appear to be the reason for the condition of things? Why do we not make the most of ourselves and obtain the obtainable? I am inclined to believe that laziness is the greatest cause of failure. I am using the term "laziness" in its broadest sense and I am allowing it to cover practically everything for which we are responsible. I believe that laziness is largely the cause of bad habits and every form of dissipation, because the bad boy or man is too lazy to be good or decent. I believe that laziness is at the bottom responsible for lack of ambition, because one cannot be lazy and ambitious at the same time. I believe that laziness is the greater part of extravagance, because the extravagant man is too lazy to save. Laziness, however, cannot be held responsible for lack of natural judgment or for dearth of natural ability. Its responsibility must be limited necessarily to those things over which we have control. It is laziness that makes the boy or man late because he does not have to be late. It is laziness that makes him unwilling to do his best, because he can do his best if he will, and there is no valid excuse why he should not do so. It is laziness that makes him watch the clock. It is laziness that keeps him from loving his work. It is laziness that makes a loafer of him. Any boy or man of ordinary capacity, who is willing to work, and who is in fair health can make a living. A failure on his part to do so, if continued, is his fault, and is probably attributable to pure and simple laziness. The active, energetic boy or man cannot become a complete failure, or remain so under ordinary conditions.

Go with me through any large department store, factory, or wholesale house and watch the men and boys at work. Those who are active, those who keep continually at it, those who seem to enjoy what they are doing, those who are not unreasonably dissatisfied with their work, those who are doing their best, are the boys and men who are going to succeed or have succeeded, and who are liable to reach a point not far inside of their capacity line.

No loafer ever made a success. He ceased being a loafer before he accomplished anything.

Ninety-nine per cent. of those who owe their failure to laziness do not mistrust the cause of it. They invariably lay it to something else, generally to lack of opportunity. I am aware that one cannot succeed without opportunity, but opportunity comes to those who are looking for it, not to those who are waiting for it. There is much more opportunity in the world than most of us are aware of. Notwithstanding the unfavorable, unnatural, and worse-growing condition of financial things, opportunity is in the very air we breathe. Our achievement depends upon our finding and developing it. Finding it, by itself alone, is worthless; but it cannot be developed if it is not discovered. Laziness prevents the discovery and utilization of opportunity.

Of course, I do not deny that many a boy or man has a great opportunity than that given to another, and I know of cases where opportunity appears never to have crossed their paths. I am dealing in majorities, not in minorities. Our opportunities, barring a few exceptions, are somewhat within our control. If we do not look for them, if we do not hunt for them, if we do not fight our way to them, we are not liable to find them. Opportunity never carries a torch. It travels on byways and along the side streets. It makes no noise. No herald sounds its approach. It passes along quietly. It makes no effort to meet any one. But it is ready to grasp the hand held out to it, although it refuses to hold out its hand to those who are too lazy to reach for it.

I deeply regret that my regard for truth, and my desire to present it in its undressed state, necessitate the admittance that there is such a thing as luck. The successful man, especially, denies its existence, because his pride is hurt if he acknowledges that luck contributed to his attainment. I do not like to call it luck, but it exists, nevertheless. Luck is at its best but the result of chance, while success is the product of intention.

At times, luck appears to play an important part, and many a man would not have reached superlative fame, or approached even a smaller degree of it, had he not been what we call 'lucky.' But no thinking man, no man who is able to make a correct diagnosis of things, believes that luck in itself has any permanent value. As a rule, it comes to those who deserve it.

Luck is but another name for unexpected opportunity.

No sensible man ever depended upon it, and no man of attainment ever waited for it. Luck is of no benefit to the lazy boy or man. Luck never started anybody unless he was reasonably roused in the first place. Luck does nothing for any one who is not willing to do something for himself. Luck helps those who help themselves.

A willingness to work and a well defined and developed ambition will dispel most of our languidness, cure many of our ordinary aches and pains, and remove many forms of indisposition.

The active, successful man keeps continually at it. Neither indigestion, nor headache, nor anything save that of serious character, more than temporarily interferes with his duties. He is doing something or planning something even while on his sick bed, and his activity increases with his convalescence. True, he often overworks, and I deeply regret to say that overwork seems to play an important part of success-making. Yes, as much as I deplore this condition of things, I would rather see a man sick from overwork than well from laziness. Better wear yourself out doing something than rust out doing nothing.

The lazy man never succeeded, simply because it is utterly impossible for laziness to accomplish anything.

If you are not succeeding, find out what the matter is. Don't blame your employer; don't blame your environment; don't blame your luck; don't blame anybody or anything else. Proceed to locate the trouble. Probably it is your laziness are the cause. Then change your environment or change your job until you have evidence that where you are there is opportunity. Investigate the opportunities afterward. Perhaps you will always control your environment, or you are master of your environment, at least; and when you have yourself in hand, you cannot be kept from being master of the Higher license may diminish the number of saloons, but it will increase the profits of those who remain, and the gaming tables will simply be removed from public gaze, where the play will be higher and the devotees more numerous and freer from observation.

In his message to the Legislature, Gov. Hagerman advocated the passage of a stringent anti-gambling law providing penalties of from $200 to $5000 fine, and imprisonment of from two months to one year, and recommended that any deficit be made up by increasing the liquor license fees. At present two-thirds of the net amount received by the Territory from liquor and gambling licenses is by law paid into the district school funds and one-third into the general county school funds. This open indorsement of public gambling is very repulsive to self-respecting citizens, and peculiarly revolting to prospective settlers from the East. The number of retail liquor licenses in the various counties in 1905 was 585, wholesale licenses 32, and gambling licenses 360. The total income therefrom to the Territory was only $164,000, of which less than half came from the gambling privileges. The figures for 1906 show no material change. In the city of Raton there are nineteen saloons and seventeen licensed gambling tables. The former pay to the city $400 per year and the latter $200 per year, each. Without exception, the games are run as accessories to a saloon, the tables being ranged near the wall directly in front of the bar. The spectacle is usually sufficient to cause a "tenderfoot" to "stop, look, listen—and play."

In the towns of Roswell and Artesia public gambling has been abolished by ordinance, and the experiment of exceedingly high liquor license (as much as $2000) has been tried with beneficial results. "If our liquor license fees were $1500 or $2000, instead of $800," said W. A. Chapmal, City Clerk of Raton, "we might have ten saloons where we now have twenty, but the municipality would receive just as much, or more, money. Take Chihuahua, as it is called, the old Mexican portion of the city now chiefly notorious as our tenderloin. Doubling the retail license fee would probably reduce the number of saloons from four or five to two. Then if a man were to get drunk and commit a crime, it would be much easier to find out where he obtained the liquor and trace his movements. Increasing the license fee would reduce crime by enhancing the efficiency of the police—at least it has so worked out when tried in other communities."

OWNERS HAVE CINCH.

That most of the games are unfair requires no proof. In his message Gov. Hagerman treats of this feature as follows: "Some of the games as played here afford the player 250 per cent. less chance of winning than similar games offer in the large gambling establishments of Europe which pay enormous dividends to their stockholds." As Gov. Hagerman was formerly an assistant secretary of legation at St. Petersburg, he presumably knows what he is talking about. I cannot quite follow the Governor's mathematics, but there is no doubt as to the correctness of his conclusion: "The games most general in New Mexico are so arranged that the chances are many times in favor of the proprietors." This statement places the Territory in the position of indorsing and abetting "skin" games.

There has been such long and gradual preparation in New Mexico for the impending prohibition of public gambling that the change will be almost inperceptible. About 1890 the "female warblers," or concert hall singers, were put out of business by Territorial enactment. Then came a further prohibition which did not become effective without a struggle—the law against "packing guns." By this enactment, known as "the six-shooter law," every man on arrival in a town or city was compelled to shed from his person his revolvers and cartridges and leave them in the custody of some resident until he was ready to go home, or to pay a fine of from $50 to $300 if he refused or neglected to do so. Still heavier fines are imposed for using or brandishing a deadly weapon. Then came the requirement (enforced with varying degrees of strictness) that a barroom and dissolute women should not be housed in the same building.

And now the Territorial Council is considering a bill providing that "any person within the Territory of New Mexico who deals, plays, carries on, opens, or causes to be opened, or conducts either as owner or employé, whether for hire or not, any game of faro, monte, roulette, lansquenet, rouge-et-noire, rondo, fan-tan, poker, seven-and-a-half, twenty-one, chuck-a-luck, slot machine, or any banking or percentage game, or any other kind of game played with cards, dice, or any device, for money, checks, credit, or any other representative of value, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1000, or by imprisonment in the County Jail for not more than one year, or either. The mention of these excessive penalties at first alarmed the gamblers, and their organization (for they have a Territorial one) at once headed a lobby in the direction of the Capitol at Santa Fé. There they received the cheering assurance that the bill in its present form (modeled after the proposed Littlefield bill in Congress) had not the slightest chance of passing; and that even if it did pass, a judge could impose a sentence of $1 fine or one day imprisonment for a justice of the peace could discharge an offender under section 2, which provides: "All prosecutions for offenses committed under this act shall be by indictment and trial in the district courts; provided, that complaints for the violation of this act may be made before a justice of the peace, and a preliminary examination may be held before such justice of the peace, as in case of the commission of felonies."

As in all reforms, the impelling force has been a gradually crystallizing public opinion. Both Arizona and New Mexico have consuming ambitions in the direction of Statehood. The defeat of the joint proposition last fall has increased the rivalry, not to call it enmity, between them. The threat of the Littlefield bill put Arizona on her good behavior, and now New Mexico is compelled to follow suit. In their excess of zeal, however, some Arizona municipalities may have gone too far, and New Mexico will be quick to take advantage of her rival's hasty and extreme action. The Arizona anti-gambling law is due to take effect April 1. But Prescott, the capital city, could not wait that long to "show off" her newly-donned white robes of virtue, and passed an anti-gambling ordinance to go into force February 1, which shut down all forty of her public games and interfered seriously with the social diversions of her fashionables. The ordinance prohibits the playing of euchre for prizes, and all other gambling games popular in social circles are likewise put under ban. Hereafter the Prescott society belle who offers her guests prizes for winning any game of chance or skill puts herself exactly on the same plane, so far as liability to arrest and punishment is concerned, with the gambler who backs a crap game. Fear of enforcement of the new ordinance has also stopped the giving of prizes at parties and church functions.

The disappearance of "the American frontier" has resulted in the creation of a public sentiment which has decreed that "the gambler must go," and frequent disaster has taught the gambler the futility of resistance. His fatal mistake has been the exhibition of "a law-breaking spirit," and a defiance of public opinion.

A Queer Thing Is Man.

Wouldn't there be a roar when men went home to their meals if they had to climb up on a high stool in front of a table on which there was no cloth and eat their meals in that fashion? Yet a majority of men when they go to a restaurant to eat will pick out the highest stool and feedboard with no cloth on it in preference to a comfortable chair and a cloth-covered table. A man will borrow a chew of tobacco and most of them will set their teeth into the plug right where some other man has gnawed out a chew. Offer them a piece of pie at home from which the wife or one of the children has taken a bite and they would holler their heads off. At home such a fellow will not drink out of a glass or cup from which one of the family has been drinking. Call him into the back stall of a dirty old livery barn, pull out a bottle and he will stick the neck of the bottle half way down his throat in order to get a swig after a dozen other fellows have had the neck of the same bottle in their mouths.—[Eureka (Kan.) Messenger.

James H. Barrett, 20 years old, has been awarded $17,000 for the loss of his right eye, by a Chicago court. Barrett was employed by the Chicago Bridge and Iron Company, and in December, 1902, was holding a drift pin against a steel plate when another workman struck the top of the drift pin with a sledge and a piece of steel struck Barrett's eye.

THE INDUSTRIAL WORM TURNS.

BUTTE AND BISBEE UNIONS GET A SET-BACK.

Operators Find It More Satisfactory to Shut Down Than Submit to Union Dictation — Remarkable Progress of Open Shop Movement the Past Year.

The "totemites" of Montana and Arizona are having a novel experience at the present time in the opposition presented to the extension of union-labor rule. At Bisbee the movement toward the investigation of the miners, who have been already getting better wages and better hours than the unions demand, has resulted in the closing down of mining properties, as the owners prefer to stop production rather than be subject to union dictation in any respect. At Butte the newspapers have already been so overridden by the Pressmen's and Typographical unions, that a further demand for increased wages has resulted in all the newspapers suspending publication rather than yield to the demand. With no papers being published the merchants are doing no advertising, and are suffering from a consequent depressed business condition. Other interests are also becoming stagnant, while all the employés of the several newspaper establishments are getting an enforced vacation in place of the high wages they were previously receiving. The only wonder is that other communities have not done as these employers of Butte and Bisbee are now doing. Industries cannot long be continued unless expenses can be met, and the union argument that operators can increase their charge to consumers whenever they may find it difficult to meet the union demand, is as unstable a proposition as was the one made by Satan when he told Christ that the world should be His if He would serve him rather than God. The competition in products and the expense of production are all subject to so many conditions that the employé receiving his regular wages is more frequently better off in many respects than is his employer. Such a comparative condition cannot go on forever. The worm will turn, as it is now turning in Bisbee and in Butte, and as it has been turning in many other great industrial communities in different parts of the country. How rapid is this movement to throw off the domination of unionism can be seen from the fact that during 1906 the following great industries have become "open shop:"

United States government shops.
Carnegie Steel Company.
National Tube Company.
William Cramp & Sons' Shipbuilding Company.
Pressed Steel Car Company.
Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company.
Union Switch and Signal Company.
American Locomotive Company.
Baldwin Locomotive Company.
Pennsylvania Railroad shops.
Fort Wayne Railroad shops.
Baltimore and Ohio Railroad shops.
Grand Trunk Railway shops.
National Cash Register Company.
American Can Company.
International Harvester Company.
Deering Harvester Company.
American Steel Foundry Company.
The Crane Company.
The Illinois Steel Company.
The Pullman Company.
Allis-Chalmers Company.
American Radiator Company.
United States Cast Iron, Pipe and Foundry Company.
Midvale Steel Company.

The year has also witnessed the organization of the National Erectors' Association, which, in its effect upon the building trades situation in the large cities of the East, is most important. It has done more to open-shop the making and erection of structural iron and steel than any other movement in the history of that industry, and by supporting the allied iron associations of New York, the open shop was established in iron construction in that city, and the Housesmiths' and Bridgemen's Union, one of the most desperate labor organizations this community has ever seen, was utterly defeated and has formally accepted the open shop. Open-shop steel erection has been established in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Chicago, and the Pennsylvania Steel Company is today building the great Blackwell's Island bridge across the Harlem River, a $4,000,000 contract, entirely open shop, an unheard-of effort in New York.

Practically all the steel used in construction is made in the various plants of the American Bridge Company, Pennsylvania Steel Company and the other large manufacturers under open-shop conditions.

In the building trades, the great stronghold of closed-shop unionism, the most remarkable progress has been made during the past year. In the city of New York, the stronghold of the most powerful building trades in America, not only steel structure, but the carpenters and painters are practically open shop. Throughout the South, in Louisville, Atlanta, New Orleans, Mobile, Jacksonville, Chattanooga, Houston, Dallas and most of the leading cities of the South, the building trades are entirely, or with the exception of one or two trades, operating with independent workmen.

In the West, Kansas City and St. Louis have put the planing mills and most of the building trades on the open shop.

The labor trust has operated so tyrannically with the public as well as with employers that a great revulsion of sentiment has permeated the entire country. Two years ago the press and pulpit were delivering platitudes about the oppression of workingmen. Now all this is changed, since it has been discovered that the enormous labor trust is the heaviest oppressor of the independent workman as well as of the common American citizen.

In Butte, where the publishers of all the newspapers have "struck" against the union demand for an increase of about 20 per cent. in wages of their employés, and in a notice to the Typographical Union they say that existing wages can be reduced 10 per cent. and still be the highest in the world. The publishers also demand that wages be put back to what they were previous to the last raise, to which the union employés say they cannot accede because it would be contrary to the rules of the International Typographical Union. Union slaves. They cannot regulate their own wages enough so that they can return to work. The comparative relief pittance they will receive from the union treasury will not provide the things they have been enjoying under the highest wages in the world régime that has prevailed in the past. Butte newspapers will become "open shop" as a result of this controversy.

The Medical Expert Dethroned.

For years the medical expert on the witness stand has been having fun with the human race by talking in terms that no one could understand and looking wise. Who, for instance, knew whether the bone or nerve the expert located in the small of the back three inches from the spinal column and six inches from the suspender button was there or somewhere in the neighborhood of the big toe? Those who didn't had to hold their peace while the expert spoke. Neither could they tell whether he was calling the bone by its right name or just for the sake of fluency was slipping in the Latin name for a croquet ball. People who have met with the expert and been crushed by him will appreciate the brainy move of Jerome, who meets the experts on their own ground, and carelessly springs on them some word of which they have never heard. It was time that some one called the expert and now he appears to have been called good and proper.—[Chicago News.

THEORIES COST CHICAGO DEAR.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP NOTIONS WORK OUT POORLY.

Under Mayor Dunne's Administration Marvelous Growth in City's Legal Expenses Appears—Corporation Counsel's Office Said to Be a Refuge for Many Politicians.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Feb. 20.—Municipal ownership theories, as practiced by Mayor Dunne, are costing the city of Chicago a pretty penny. This is shown in the marvelous growth of the city's law department, both as to the number of persons employed and the aggregate expenses.

In 1903 the total expense of the Corporation Counsel's office was $73,000. This was increased in 1904 to $106,823. In 1905, the first year of the Dunne administration, the office cost $149,062. Estimates for the year 1906, the figures not yet being compiled, give a total of over $200,000.

During the first six months of last year the city spent for its law advisers $97,846, as compared with $63,346 for the corresponding period of the previous year. At the same rate of increase the expenses of the law department will exceed $250,000 for the current year, not taking into account the heavy additions required as a result of taking over the City Attorney's work.

The law department seems to have been the refuge for a large number of political lawyers who endeared themselves to the Mayor by their zeal for municipal ownership. There was, of course, no civil service requirement in the Corporation Counsel's office, and when places had to be provided for men who had made themselves useful, one after another of them was sent to this office.

As the office could not get along without the force which had been trained in city work, nearly all the old force was retained. It is related at the City Hall that in at least a dozen cases Corporation Counsel J. Ham Lewis, in the jargon of the corridors, "went to the mat" with the Mayor and succeeded in preventing the retention of men without any qualification for the work. In other instances the doughty colonel was unable to overcome the political claims of the applicants, and they went on the pay roll permanently.

The real work of the office, however, continues to be done by the old-timers who were kept on, notwithstanding the fact that they were all Harrison men. Sometimes they were dismissed for a while but found their way back again as the need for their services became pressing.

All this time the city is paying large sums for special counsel. To look after immediate municipal ownership, C. S. Darrow received $50 a day, with $25 a day to Attorney Glen E. Plumb to assist him. Maj. E. B. Tolman drew $50 a day to look after traction cases in the Supreme Court. W. L. Fisher was put on the roll of the Mayor's contingent fund at $10,000 a year. Francis S. Walker, as a special counsel, drew $100 a day, and Joseph Davis half as much. Porter Thorne is said to have received $50 a day.

In the City Prosecutor's office a dozen men were employed, mainly from the list of I.M.O. workers. Even before the City Attorney's office passed into the control of the Mayor, a half dozen I.M.O. men had been sent over with the request to give them places.

SOME UNION BOYCOTTS.

All Members of the Methodist Church to Be Treated Same as Unfair Beer.

[American Industries:] According to an Illinois paper organized labor in that State in its fight upon the Methodist Book Concern proposes the issuance of a poster which will authorize a boycott of the Methodist denomination as a whole. Samuel Olsen of Typographical Union No. 16 of Chicago says:

"Organized labor will prove to the Methodist church that the finger of scorn never points heavenward. If the commercial interests of the denomination lock their doors against us, then we will close the doors of our homes against them. We cannot afford to chance the future of our children to the spiritual guidance of men who have publicly shown their contempt toward organization."

This boycott, the statement goes on, is proposed to be the most thorough ever attempted. It will be carried on against the business man who refuses to withdraw his support from the church. His business, after a fair warning, will be placed on the "we don't patronize" list of the central body in the town or city where he is located. Physicians, dentists and professional men generally will be asked to take sides for or against organized labor.

It is the hope of the officials of organized labor that pressure enough to break the alleged lock-out by the publishing agents of the book concern can be brought to bear.

UNION BEER DRIVERS.

When the unions start in to boycott things unfair they draw no lines, one thing is as good as another on which to wreak union vengeance. The following is "official" from the Brewers' Gazette of Cincinnati:

Boycott!—The Wollner Distilling Company, in Peoria, Ill., is unfair to organized labor. The principal brands of this firm are: "Wollner's Dry Gin" and "Old Grove Rye." Brothers, do not buy these goods! Beer drivers especially, see that these goods are not handled at any bar!

UNIONS DEFEND MURDERERS.

The Western Federation of Miners is raising the huge sum of $300,000 for the defense of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, the men under arrest for the murder of Gov. Steunenberg of Idaho. Money, they say, is no object to them, as the attempt to convict these alleged murderers is "an attack upon the fundamental principles of free government."

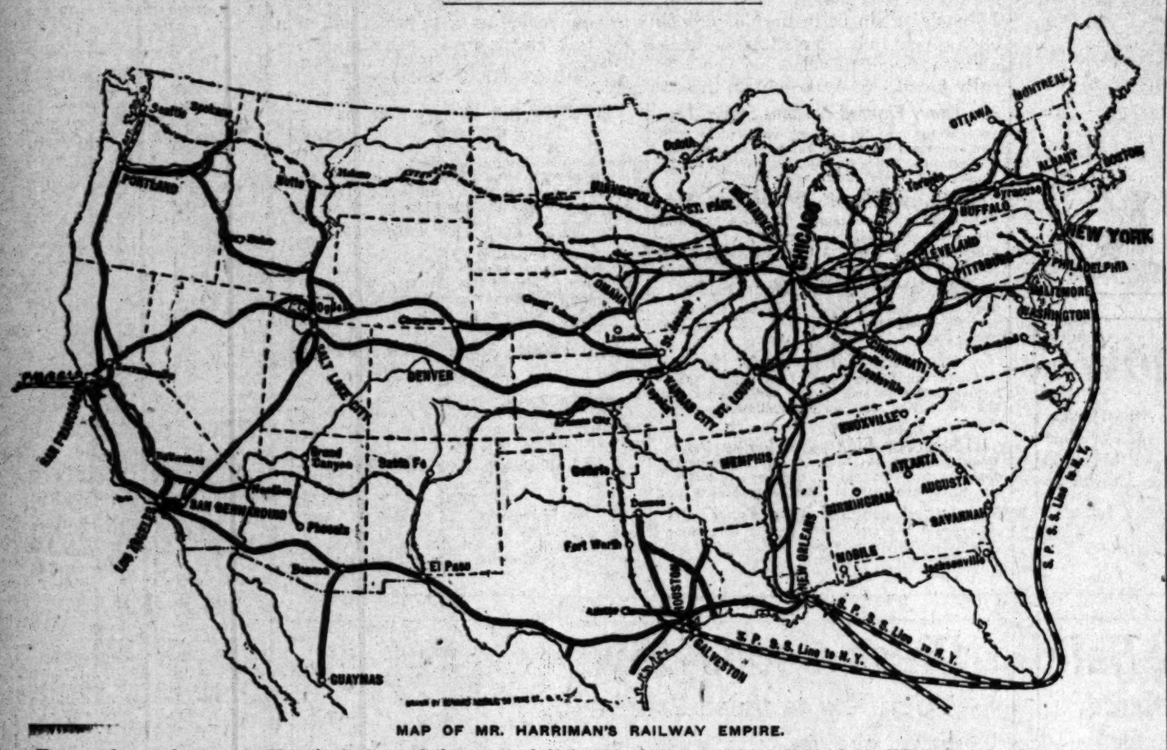
JAPANESE LOYALTY.

Money Is Saved That It May Be Contributed to the National Fund.

The Jiyu Tsushin of Tokyo relates the following incident:

"A certain Kusakabe has presented a memorial concerning the special treatment of contributions into the House of Commons through Messrs. Kitamura and Nakabayashi, M. P. He is a workman in a certain factory, receiving only 75 sen a day, but by dint of hard labor and severe economy he saved about four thousand yen. It has been his opinion that the real object of saving is to contribute the saved money towards the national funds for the sake of the country. With this object in view he wanted to contribute 2000 yen out of the saved money, the rest being laid aside for his living expenses. But seeing that there is no special law concerning the keeping of such contributions, he introduced the memorial in question into the Diet."

THE ENORMOUS KINGDOM OF STEEL OVER WHICH E. H. HARRIMAN RULES.



MAP OF MR. HARRIMAN'S RAILWAY EMPIRE.

Known only to a few men on Wall street ten years ago; going into the directorate of the Union Pacific nine years ago, with nearly all the other members of the directorate asking, "Who is E. H. Harriman?" made chairman of the Executive Committee the next year of a run-down road of 1000 miles length, which had just gotten out of the hands of the government receiver.

At the end of nine years president of the Union Pacific and its allied lines, with a total mileage of 15,623 miles.

Now with almost complete control of another group of roads aggregating 10,010 miles.

With a decidedly heavy influence in a third group of roads aggregating 28,637 miles.

A grand total of 54,300 miles, with a capitalization in the lines under his immediate control amounting to $1,-113,717,359.

Capitalization in the second group of $645,829,261, and in the third group of $1,798,437,539.

A total capitalization of $3,557,984,-159, with annual earnings in the group under his immediate control of $175,-914,091, the net earnings $84,186,514.

the business of the country held by this one man.

Mr. Harriman began this railroad career taking a subordinate position in a New York syndicate engaged in buying up second mortgages on the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad covering 1000 miles between Omaha and Ogden. The road had been bankrupt for years and was considered then moribund. It is said that his associates when his name was mentioned said in astonishment, "Take Mr. Harriman in! What does he know about putting a railroad on its feet? By all means let us steer clear of Harriman." That was the estimate the business world put upon him ten years ago. Its estimate at the present time is changed to a degree that is astonishing. The capital and debt of the road which he took over stood for $188,-450,920. Its gross earnings amounted to $14,382,291. The net earnings were $4,740,471, which after paying fixed charges left a deficit of $1,081,588.

The first group covered by the heavy line shows the railroads in which E. H. Harriman's authority is now supreme. These are the main lines of the Union Pacific from Kansas City to Omaha and Ogden, Butte and Portland, the main line of the Southern Pacific from Ogden to San Francisco and from Portland by San Francisco and Los Angeles to New Orleans and Galveston.

The second solid line less heavy than the first represents the second group in which Mr. Harriman's power is almost dominant. The roads include the Baltimore & Ohio and Illinois Central, the St. Joseph & Grand Island, and the San Pedro & Salt Lake.

According to the Wall Street Journal, from which these figures are taken, the Union Pacific owns 30 per cent. of the Illinois Central stock and it is prophesied that it will soon own 50 per cent. of it. The Pennsylvania system holds a large percentage of Baltimore & Ohio stock as the Union Pacific, but the doubt is expressed that this preponderance will remain. Anyhow, Mr. Harriman is said to be the largest individual owner of Baltimore & Ohio stock, while his associates, Stillman and Frick, hold a great deal more. Harriman is said to be able to increase Union Pacific holdings in the Baltimore & Ohio stock 20 per cent. or 30 per cent. without calling on the stock market for a single share.

The third group is represented by a dotted line. In this Mr. Harriman has only a powerful voice. Among them is the Atchison, of which the Union Pacific and its friends own $40,000,000 worth of the stock, the greatest individual ownership in that property. It is what is called a passive power. That is, the Atchison system can go its own way as long as it does nothing which will seriously interfere with Harriman plans, and in the second place nobody else can get control of the Atchison if Mr. Harriman knows he is after the road.

A similar condition holds in the case of the New York Central, where the Union Pacific holdings are nearly $15,-000,000, the largest individual ownership. Harriman's associates are said to hold as much more.

The railroad people call the Union Pacific position in the railroad world at the present time the "spinal column" and they say that if a finger touches this spinal column, the New York Central and Baltimore & Ohio twitch.

One-quarter of the railroad mileage, Hill system in the northwest were the only railroad system really independent of Harriman influence. While the Harriman strength is scattered over nearly the whole surface of the United States, Hill has stayed at home and built up for himself what railroad men call a railway Gibralter. The Hill system is so well guarded that it would be hard for the Harriman influence to assert itself anywhere in that territory. The system covers 22,000 miles of road, with net earnings not much short of $110,000,-000, and here Hill in his own person is absolutely supreme.

Next in disputing Harriman supremacy are the Moores and the Goulds. These men do not make an aggressive fight against Harriman and his associates as Hill does. What the Goulds will do when the Western Pacific reaches the Pacific Coast can only be guessed at. The expansion of the Burlington to Salt Lake and possibly farther to San Francisco would be a direct attack upon Harriman.

The New York paper just quoted has been recently engaged in a dispute with Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintenance and operations of the Harriman lines. The Wall street paper instituted a comparison between the operations of the Hill system and of the Harriman system, to the detriment of Harriman management. To this Mr. Kruttschnitt took exception. Sifting this to the bottom, it seems that the Hill system has a great advantage over the Union Pacific in the lower gradients over which business has to be done. The locomotive load of "revenue freight" of the Union Pacific is put at 373 tons and of the Great Northern at 516 tons. The Union Pacific rate is put at .0915 mills per average ton mile. The Great Northern rate is .0791 per average ton mile. The Union Pacific rate is 15 per cent. greater than the rate of the Great Northern. The average haul on the Union Pacific is 410 miles and on the Great Northern 256 miles. The Great Northern hauls 110 more tons of "revenue freight" to the trainload than the Union Pacific. This is nearly half a trainload for roads like the St. Paul or the Chicago & Northwestern.

Total gross earnings in the three groups of $685,027,115, net earnings $244,633,846.

These facts represent the rise of the present king of railroads in the United States.

These figures of mileage, capitalization and earnings tax the mind in a vain attempt to grasp the power in the business world held in the hands of this man, unknown only a decade ago. His own profits out of the ten years' career are said to amount to $150,-000,000.

The map accompanying this article and the tables giving details of this grouping of the railroads under Harriman control or influence set out much more graphically than any writing could do the enormous power over and that the wealthiest in the country, is under the sway of E. H. Harriman. The various ramifications give him a voice, and a powerful one, in a much larger mileage.

It is pointed out that this Harriman system includes the three great seaports of the Pacific Coast, Portland, San Francisco and San Pedro. The Wall Street Journal says: "Mr. Harriman is today arbiter of the traffic destinies of these ports, although his sway is soon to be disputed. The three ports themselves are connected by the Southern Pacific." Attention is called to the convergence of these lines at Salt Lake, Ogden, Omaha and Kansas City, which after traversing the country, find common termini in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore. The map also shows the powerful influence of the Southern Pacific steamship lines running from Galveston and New Orleans to New York.

From this review it seems as if the PHILIPPINE COMMERCE IN 1906.

BY WALTER J. BALLARD.

Official returns by the Bureau of Insular Affairs for the fiscal year 1906 give the islands an excess of exports over imports of $6,117,868, as follows:

Exports to all countries	$31,917,124
Imports from all countries	25,799,256
Excess of exports	$6,117,868

Giving the islands a monthly favorable balance of trade of over $500,-000, and a total foreign commerce for the year of $57,716,400, equal to $4,809,-700 a month. That is very much more outside business than the Philippines ever did, even in the very best of the four hundred years of Spanish rule.

THE YEAR'S TRADE.

That year's trade of $57,716,400 was with the following countries:

	Exported to.	Imported from.
United States	$31,579,411	$ 4,182,820
Great Britain	7,490,677	5,224,020
Hongkong	5,668,781	304,291
France	2,702,228	333,858
Spain	1,805,065	1,787,310
China	1,706,980	2,654,214
British East Indies	663,457	1,515,042
Japan	532,745	45,7,386
Australasia	463,062	1,552,668
Germany	458,426	1,360,961
Italy	71,260	197,865
French East Indies	6,330	2,854,217
All other countries	772,137	1,552,541
Totals for 1906	$31,917,124	$25,799,256
Totals for 1905	32,252,615	20,876,350
Decreases in 1906	$435,491	$5,077,094

The decrease in exports, $435,491, while not pleasant, is trifling as compared with the agreeable import decrease of $5,077,084, as $3,081,238 of that decrease was in rice, imported for food purposes in 1905, but of which a replacing quantity was raised in the islands in 1906. The rice imports in 1906 were the smallest since 1900. "There is thus," says the annual report of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, Capt. Frank McIntyre, acting chief, "an approximate return to conditions existing prior to the advent of rinderpest (affecting the labor and carrying animals—carabao) and insurrection, a practical supply of the islands' needs through home production seems to be indicated in the near future."

Other imports in 1906, showing decreases as compared with 1905, were:

	Decreases.
Opium (a matter of rejoicing)	$409,919
Illuminating oil	454,580
Beer, spirits and wines (no great loss)	142,000
Coal	107,000
Fresh beef	80,000
Iron, steel and machinery	40,000

There was also a reduction of $60,-000 in imports of refined sugar, but that was really a gain, being the result of local production by the Malabon refinery, recently put into operation after remaining idle for a number of years. It is to the interest of the United States that the Philippines should be self-supporting in food products.

The chief import gains were:

Cotton goods ($6,750,000)	$324,000
Wheat flour ($824,059)	100,000
Agricultural implements and scientific apparatus	100,000

With the exception of the French East Indies (rice) the participation of the United States in the 1906 import trade of the islands suffered to a greater extent than any other country, for, with a reduction of about 16 per cent. in total imports, purchases of American goods fell off 25 per cent., or $1,-427,605, as compared with 1905.

The bureau's annual report says: "The most conspicuous item in this decline of American trade is to be found in that of cotton cloths, which represents one-third of the total decline. This is to be attributed to the unfavorable operation of the cotton textile schedule in the (Philippine) tariff of 1905, amounting in effect to a discrimination against this important American manufacture in the import trade of the islands. The American decline in this item was from $700,-000 in 1905 to $224,000 in 1906. Congress corrected this by Act of February 26, 1906."

Other American import losses were:

Illuminating oil	$171,000
Wheat flour	170,000
Beer	76,000
Electrical machinery (though still leading)	100,000

Against these can be put $160,000 gain in agricultural implements, telegraph, telephone and scientific instruments and apparatus, in each of which American makes lead.

PHILIPPINE EXPORTS.

The exports of the Philippines in 1906 fiscal year, and the shares of each item taken by the United States were:

	Exported.	United States' share.
Hemp	$19,446,769	$11,165,226
Sugar	4,865,885	290,194
*Copra (dried cocoanut)	4,041,115
Tobacco	2,389,550	31,663

The $435,481 decline in exports in 1906 as compared with 1905, is chiefly found in the item of hemp, though manufactured tobacco and sugar also show small reductions. Increased values are to be noted in copra and leaf tobacco, the other leading items of export. The typhoon of September, 1905 played havoc with the hemp production of the islands, causing the 18,000 tons decrease in hemp exports, with no decrease whatever in the world's demand for this chief product of the islands. The average price was somewhat better in 1906 than in 1905, but not sufficiently higher to offset the deficit of $2,699,742 in the 1906 total export value of this normally most prosperous of the islands' industries. It was copra which really saved the day in the 1906 exports as a whole. That increased $1,947,760 on the $2,000,000 export thereof in 1905. The price was also slightly higher.

PRICE OF STOCK ADVANCES MARCH 1

Only 5 Days More Can You Buy Boston-Johnnie at 20 Cents.

The BOSTON-JOHNNIE MINING AND MILLING COMPANY has closed a contract for the erection of a mill upon its own property, and the builders promise to have the mill completed and operating within ninety days. This mill is being erected upon the Boone claim which, with the taking up of the bond, becomes a valuable accession to our holdings. The capacity of the mill will be from 25 to 40 tons per diem. Our company has agreed to supply 25 tons of ore a day, and the mill owners have agreed that they will take all our ore in preference to others, and will increase the capacity to 100 tons a day within thirty days after written notice from us.

We have now about 9000 tons of ore blocked out, and as soon as the mill is ready to treat it, we shall begin the delivery of not less than 25 tons a day. This ore will average about $35 to the ton at the mine, and after deducting milling charges of $7 a ton we expect to realize $28 A TON NET, or $700 A DAY, and at the rate of OVER $250,000 A YEAR.

Thus we have provided for the immediate treatment of ores which we are taking out under the Bowler lease and the Bennett lease, and have with forethought provided for quadruple capacity in expectation of taking out a much larger quantity of ore on the new property which we acquire. The Boone claim is indisputably one of the choicest pieces of undeveloped property in the Johnnie district. Experts estimate that the Bowler and Bennett leases alone, which are now in rich ore, SHOULD YIELD BETWEEN $600,000 AND $800,000 during the life of the leases.

Watch Johnnie Grow

The Johnnie district is making history these days. If you read the mining news of the coming month carefully you will learn of the consummation of an important deal, involving the transfer of some of the older and more celebrated mines in Johnnie. The recent purchases by Wingfield, Nixon and Doubleday are of two valuable mines which adjoin our properties. The Pittsburg-Johnnie touches the Boone claim and the Globe-Johnnie is adjacent to the Bennett and Bowler leases on the Minnie Mae.

All of our properties are contiguous and nearly encompass one end of the Johnnie Consolidated Mining Co.'s property, which is the oldest mine in the district.

Businesslike Management

Most of the readers of this newspaper are acquainted with the officers and directors of the Boston-Johnnie M. & M. Co. If any one is not so acquainted, and will take the trouble to ask his banker to get a report from either Dun's or Bradstreets, on any officer of the Boston-Johnnie or its fiscal agent, James R. H. Wagner, he will be satisfied that he is doing business with men whose business record is clean and whose credit is unimpeachable. The officers of the company are as follows:

PRESIDENT, W. D. WILSON, president Wilson Oil Company.
VICE-PRESIDENT, WALTER R. WHEAT, vice-president Bank of Venice.
SECRETARY AND TREASURER, JAMES R. H. WAGNER, investment broker.
DIRECTOR, WILLIAM G. STEWART, general contractor.
SUPERINTENDENT, F. E. BENNETT, mining operator, Johnnie, Nevada.

It is the judgment of all who are connected with the Boston-Johnnie M. & M. Co. that they have ELIMINATED EVERY ELEMENT OF UNCERTAINTY as far as it is possible to do so in any mining venture; that they have STRENGTHENED THE HOLDINGS OF THE COMPANY TO MORE THAN DOUBLE THEIR VALUE when stock was first offered at 20 cents a share, and an ADVANCE OF THE PRICE HAS BEEN POSITIVELY COMMANDED TO TAKE PLACE ON THE FIRST OF MARCH.

Our Last Word to You

The advance is fully justified by the facts set forth above, and by the further fact that eager buying at 20 cents since the mill contract has become known has nearly exhausted what little 20-cent stock we have. It is doubtful if we can fill all the orders at 20 cents which will be received in the next five days. FIRST COME WILL BE FIRST FILLED. Oversubscriptions will be returned or filled at the advanced price. To make sure of securing stock at 20 cents, COMMUNICATE WITH US AS EARLY AS POSSIBLE ON MONDAY—TOMORROW.

You may wire or 'phone reservations and remit by first mail.

IMPRESSIVE DOCUMENTS.

Government archives are being attractively arranged in the new archive building for the benefit of visitors to Hawaii. There are autograph letters from a number of Presidents of the United States, and letters from foreign potentates. One especially interesting part of the display consists of numerous treaties made with foreign governments by the Hawaiian kingdom. The magnificent wax seals, enclosed in their silver cases, furnish an impressive and dignified air to the manuscripts.

DEVELOPMENT WORK.

The Hawaii Development Company has begun a good work for the Territory by ordering a complete survey of the harbor of Kealakekua, on the Island of Hawaii. If this be completed, and the harbor becomes available for vessels of commerce by the time the lands are settled and crops ready for market, it will be of immense advantage to the small settlers, as well as to the sugar producers in the district. Nothing daunted by the loss of money which he put into the Molokane problem, J. B. Castle is going ahead on new lines and on a larger scale. His object is not the acquisition of gain from the settlers, but he is actuated by purely public-spirited motives. He cannot afford to interfere with the main industry of the Territory, and he will undoubtedly accomplish more in the way of land settlement and cultivation as an individual. This the Territory has not been able to do, because it has been hampered by lack of available funds for such a purpose. He hopes to fill at least one section of these islands with industrial settlers, who will raise coffee, pineapple, sisal, chicory, quinine, vanila, wine, small fruits, vegetables and other products, of which the market is so much in need, and which are now imported from the mainland.

It is generally conceded that the month of January was a good one in business circles. It is feared, however, that the present month will not make such a favorable record. The continued wet weather during January prevented the regular employment of labor on the plantations. Consequently, the workers have less money with which to meet their obligations at the stores, which, in turn, will be a little slow in remitting to merchants. The abundant rains, however, will prove a favorable trade factor through furnishing an ample supply of water for agricultural purposes, and the plantation outlook is generally regarded as favorable.

WHAT WE ARE DOING NOW AND WHAT WE PROPOSE DOING IN THE NEW PLANT.

Best Equipped Machine Shops in Southern California

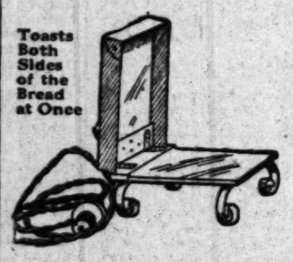
With the additional machinery now installed this company has a perfect equipment of machinery and special tools costing about $24,000, in addition to its model factory and three acres of land.

The business of the Electric Heating and Manufacturing Company represents the latest and most important achievement in electrical development. It is the practical application of electricity to the everyday needs of the people in cooking and heating. It is the kid-glove method of doing the ordinary work of the kitchen; for there is no soot, no smoke, and no dirty cooking utensils. Further, it is economical, for with all its pleasing innovations, it costs less money than any other known fuel. The Electric Heating and Manufacturing Company is incorporated with a capital stock of $250,000 divided into 250,000 shares of a par value of $1 each. All the stock is fully paid and non-assessable. There is no preferred stock. We manufacture, under patents secured to us, various heating and cooking appliances, every one of which is ordered today and every day far beyond our capacity to furnish. In the simple matter of our electric flat-iron alone orders swamp our store, although we are turning them out now at a rate of more than a thousand a month. Electric room heaters, pancake griddles, bake ovens, bread toasters and other kitchen and heating necessities are demanded by the people and by the trade in quantities that our present overworked facilities cannot begin to supply. Our new factory at Dolgeville, just outside the city limits of Los Angeles, will not only increase our producing capacity, but also our dividend paying capacity, as the business is one of the most profitable industries on the Coast. Its output sells at a profit of fully 200 per cent., assuring big returns for every share of stock in the company. The new plant will be modern in every respect. Our business is an absolute monopoly, as no other individual in the world has the right to manufacture our patented articles.

The Most Profitable Industry on the Coast

The Machinery Is Now Installed in Above Factory

Electric Toaster



As shown in the picture above, the new factory at Dolgeville is now completed. The money of the company is being wisely, ably and conservatively managed. Business principles apply, and we pay as we go. There are no assessments on our shareholders for unforseen or unexpected contingencies. Every share is jut like every other share, actually full paid and absolutely non-assessable.

Overwhelming Demand for Our Appliances

An electrical marvel for the home, the restaurant, the hotel, the rooming-house, and every place where people eat and cook. A dainty little appliance which may be connected with any electric light circuit and placed right on the table, without smoke, soot or smell, and toasting to a turn.

Put Your Money to Work

Let us put your money to work for you. It is the only way you will ever get ahead in this world. No man or woman in the world ever got rich unless he put every cent he could rake and scrape together into some kind of a business where the money worked for him. We want to do that for you. We have a business that is safe, honest, sure and without speculation. It is a business that has been in operation for some time past and has proven an immense success.

The Vital Points

There are three vital point in the success of any manufacturing enterprise. First, to invent something practical and necessary; second, to manufacture it economically and cheaply; third, to sell it easily. Failure in any of these will balk an enterprise.

This company has surmounted all of these difficulties. We have the invention; we own our own machinery, and our success in selling has been proven by the large number of orders on hand.

Every Article is a Household Necessity

An Electric Disc Heater Cooks Anything Requiring a Flat Surface.

The Electric Flatiron

Ironing is a pleasure with this new invention. Whether in heavy commercial work of the laundries or in the finest of light work in the home, this flatiron relieves froning of all its troubles.

Every Appliance a Success

The test of any new invention is the degree of its acceptance by the people. Reflect that, work as we do, we are unable to begin to meet the demand for these appliances and you can realize the success awaiting us in our new factory, where every facility will be provided.

There is Just a Limited Amount of Stock to Be Sold Below Par for Construction Purposes

It is the intention of the company to sell sufficient stock to fully equip its plant at Dolgeville. The success of the business, even with the overcrowded condition of our present factory, has been phenomenal. This is an opportunity for investors, large and small, to take shares in an industrial company in which returns are certain and big. Our profits are fully 300 per cent. Our expenses are merely nominal. Many people of means who find in this country only opportunities to speculate at a risk, but who realize that the industrial development of the country is just awakening, should investigate this. It will be found that every advantage claimed here is obtained conservatively, with no effort to mislead. That full and complete returns are accorded for the most searching investigation. That every stockholder enters the company on an equal footing with every other stockholder, without any preferred stock. That the ratio of profits is exactly as presented here. That the company is absolutely unable to fill its orders because of the enormous demand. That the money realized from the sale of stock is actually being used as represented, and last but not least, that the whole field of industry on the entire Pacific Coast presents no other business so sure, so safe and so profitable for every dollar invested in its shares of stock.

Those of limited means seeking to improve their condition will find in this stock the opportunity of a lifetime. Remember that the stock advance to 80 cents a share in a few days. Applications should be made for it at once—today—now. Office open Saturday evenings until 9 o'clock.

Lasting Results from using Newbro's Herpicide

"I am blessed with an abundance of long hair and I use the utmost care in the preservation of it. I have never found anything that pleases me so much as Newbro's Herpicide. It keeps the scalp clean and sanitary and adds a luxurious appearance to my hair that no other preparation will give. I consider it most delightful to use and I can truly say that I prefer it above all other preparations for the hair. I like your soap also and can recommend both highly to any lady who wishes a good head of hair."

(Signed) JENNIE A. ABBOTT,
2443 Warden Avenue,
CLEVELAND, OHIO.

While it is not natural for every one to have extremely long hair, it is possible for every lady to have beautiful hair, for when the scalp is not diseased, the hair will grow naturally and abundantly.

The chief disease of the scalp is dandruff—which is highly contagious—and dandruff is now known to be caused by an invisible vegetable growth called the dandruff germ. Ordinarily, the first signs of scalp infection are dryness, dullness and brittleness of the hair, although the disease sometimes causes excessive oiliness. Following this, the hair loses its luster, the scalp itches more or less and dandruff appears. Falling hair and baldness represent the last stages of hair destruction.

Newbro's Herpicide—the original remedy that kills the dandruff germ—will cure any stage of this disease, except chronic baldness, which is incurable. Herpicide not only destroys the dandruff germ and stops falling hair, but it is a most exquisite hair dressing, making the hair light and fluffy and giving it a silken gloss. Almost marvelous results sometimes follow the continued use of Herpicide. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

THE ROUND TABLE

IN THE BIG INDUSTRIES.

Wooden Toothpicks.

The common wooden toothpick owes its inspiration to a visit Charles Foster of Boston made to Rio Janeiro in 1858. At that place he noticed the natives picking their teeth with bits of wood made from the orange tree. He bought 75 cases of the toothpicks at $50 a case, and brought them back to Boston. These disposed of, he in company with Charles Freeman, began the manufacture of wooden toothpicks of white birch, their establishment being finally located in Dixfield, Me., where at the present time about 200 men and women are given constant employment, and 2000 cords of birch wood are required annually. The toothpicks are shipped in carload lots into every State in the Union, as well as to Canada, Australia, England, Germany and France.

Child Labor in Cotton Mills.

In view of what has been said about the number of children at work in the cotton mills of the country, and the Southern States in particular, the Manufacturers' Record calls attention to Census Bulletin 69, which gives the average number of wage earners under 16 years of age employed in the manufacture of cotton goods and cotton small wares, as reported by the census of manufactures, as follows:

States.	1905.	1900.
Alabama	3,094	2,437
Georgia	5,406	4,500
Kentucky	101	330
Maryland	785	1,116
Mississippi	556	466
North Carolina	8,212	7,129
South Carolina	8,835	8,110
Tennessee	528	383
Texas	205	185
Virginia	413	651
Total South	28,135	25,307
Total U. S.	40,423	40,258

With such a decrease the South does not like to have the accusing finger pointed in its direction.

MEN AND THINGS OVER THE SEAS.

The Kaiser's New Title.

The Kaiser has evidently felt so good over the result of the recent elections that he is throwing bouquets at himself. He has added to his other title that of "Great Chief and Over King of Samoa," though the natives of that idyllic island are undoubtedly absolutely ignorant of the existence of the great white Emperor, whose subjects they are.

Glastonbury Abby at Auction.

Glastonbury Abbey, one of the most ancient sacred buildings in Great Britain, is to be sold at auction in June. It was burned in 1184, but was rebuilt by the monks, who in clearing the ruins found the forgotten burial graves of King Arthur and Queen Guinevere.

The World's Biggest Baby.

A Berlin dispatch says the biggest baby in the world has just been discovered in Kalstatt. He is the two-year-old son of August Oppe, the chief of the gendarmes in that city, and weighs exactly 186 pounds. He is already three feet in height and his chest measurement is 34 inches.

His father is a normal man and his mother is rather delicate. However, both his parents promise to head a generation of giants, as they have a second son only a year old who is growing to the same proportions of this elder brother.

PROMINENT PERSONS.

Justice Brewer of the United States Supreme Court is the best speech-maker among the nine members of that distinguished body.

William J. Oliver of Knoxville, Tenn., the contractor for the Panama Canal, is less than 45, red headed and has more than $40,000,000 in contracts under way in this country at the present time.

The leading spirit and the foremost pulpit orator of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is Bishop Charles B. Galloway of Jackson, Miss. He once led the winning forces in a State local option campaign, in which his chief opponent was Jefferson Davis.

Commander Robert E. Peary, who reached a point within 200 miles of the Pole over snow and ice last spring, was stalled by snow and ice last week when he tried to get into Norfolk, Ct., to lecture. "If I had had my dogs and sledges I might have made it," said the explorer, "but with such things as locomotives, never!"

Lord Russell, a famous jurist, once went to Scotland to help the Liberals in a campaign. He purposely began his speech with a few sentences of bad Scotch and then when the confusion caused by the blunder had subsided he said: "Gentlemen, I do not speak Scotch, but I vote Scotch and I often drink Scotch." He was greeted with tremendous applause.

Gen. O. O. Howard, the one-armed "Christian soldier," as they began to call him years ago, is in great demand at banquets and other public gatherings. He is one of the few leaders of the Civil War who are left and his empty sleeve is eloquent of the service he gave. He looks well and is as clear in mind and as common sense in his ideas as when he made the Freedman's Bureau one of the notable institutions of the land.

SCIENCE NOTES.

New Way of Condensing Milk.

By a new German process the evaporation of milk is now accomplished by the employment of cold instead of heat. After the milk has been skimmed it enters the centrifugal and is now alternately frozen and thawed out during the rotation which causes the separation of the water from the other constituents of the milk. Before putting up the milk thus dehydrated the previously removed cream is again added. The taste is said to closely resemble that of fresh milk.

Cause of Baldness.

Delos L. Parker, according to the Medical Record, has developed a theory that common baldness depends for its existence upon a double cause, one being the remote or fundamental cause represented by the absence of upper chest breathing, a condition that allows a poisonous substance to develop in the lungs; the other, the direct or exciting cause, represented by the effect produced by this poisonous substance circulating in the blood. The writer offers much interesting evidence in support of his theory.

Microbe of Whooping Cough.

M. M. Bordet and Gengon of Paris have been able to separate the microbe of whooping cough. This micro-organism they disinterred from the depths of the bronchial tubes, where it can lie dormant, and produce its maleficient effects without danger of expulsion by an ordinary cough. It is a bicullus of an ovoil shape, more or less elongated, and sometimes not unlike a micrococcus in appearance, though in general fairly constant in shape.

They have made cultures of the micro-organism; and they find that it cannot be agglutinated by the serum of ordinary persons, or by those who have had whooping cough at a remote period. The serum of children recently recovered from the malady has, however, a moderately agglutinating effect on the colonies of the microbe, so that there is some prospect of finding at some time or other an antidote against the infection.

New Theory as to Disease.

Medical men are coming round to the view that personal history is of primary importance or, in other words, that a man's own manner of life, his record of health and his circumstances should be much more carefully considered than the illnesses that his ancestors had died of. Dr. Rabagliati, a medical examiner for insurance companies, who is well known in the profession which he adorns and of high repute in the north of England, has devoted much thought to this question of heredity from a life insurance point of view. In his opinion it is not so much disease that is transmitted from one generation to another but organization, or "humanity," as he expresses it. Any member of the human family may suffer from any disease, to which humanity is subject, and when an individual so suffers it is the cause of the ailment that must be inquired into. Exposure to this or that set of conditions brings varying results. If the body is exposed to one set of conditions it will take on gout; if to another, consumption; if to a third, cancer, and so on.—[London P. T. O.

PEOPLE OF THE COAST.

Miss Jessie Robertson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Hall of Santa Rosa, will start this week for London, where she will become the wife of Frank Carroll Giffen, formerly of Santa Rosa, who has been studying music in Italy, Germany, Paris and London.

Dr. David P. Barrows of San Francisco says the religious differences between Christians and Mohammedans is the most serious question the American government has to deal with in connection with its Philippine possessions. Nurtured in the Mohammedan faith, many of the belligerent tribes, notably the Moros, he said, had preserved a fanatical hatred for the Christians, whether they be Spaniard or American, which neither the sword nor the missionary teachings was able to alter.

Prof. George H. Howison of Berkeley has developed his own system of philosophy which he is now giving to the advanced class in philosophy at the university. Prof. Howison is opposed to the theory of many other philosophers that all existence is embraced in one substance, a single conscious subject, a universal mind. His aim is to present an idealistic system that shall be thoroughly personal.

THE INNOCENT BYSTANDER.

Interesting Scientific Notes.

Some of the fixed stars have been appearing every night for fifty million years—and this without being featured in a Clyde Fitch play.

When a fly settles to the ground, the whole earth rises to meet it. This is more readily believed when we think how suddenly the whole earth rises to smite a man who falls on the sidewalk.

A fox terrier six inches high and one foot long can dig a hole three feet deep in one minute. To dig the Panama Canal in one month would only require a fox terrier eighty-nine feet long and ten feet high.

Ordinary thought moves in waves that radiate at the rate of eighty feet per second. When a man bumps into a chair in the dark his thought surges in billows that radiate at a speed of ninety miles per second.

An instrument has been invented that will measure the light and heat of stars that are invisible to the naked eye. It is of similar construction to a gas meter.

The pearl is caused by something that an oyster cannot cough up. It is often bought by something that a lobster coughs up.

A woman shopping for a dress consumes eight thousand foot pounds of energy per hour. Her husband, when he gets the bill, consumes ninety-three thousand six hundred and ten pounds of foot energy per minute.

A soft boiled egg contains more energy than a pound of beef steak. A soft, spoiled egg contains energy enough to clear a stage.

If all the useless questions asked in the world in twenty-four hours were represented by interrogation points and put in line they would extend ten feet beyond the orbit of Neptune.

If all the cigars smoked in the world each day were rolled into one the man smoking it could light it on the center of the sun and use the moon for an ash tray. He would be, in proportion to the cigar, so tall that he would have been dead and buried ten thousand years before he heard his wife telling him that he was smoking too much.

BITS OF VERSE.

The Abiding Love.

It singeth low in every heart,
We hear it each and all;
A song of those who answer not,
However we may call.
They throng the silence of the breast,
We see them as of yore;
The kind, the true, the brave, the sweet,
Who walk with us no more.

More homelike seems the vast unknown,
Since they have entered there;
To follow them were not so hard,
Wherever they may fare.
They cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
Whate'er betides, thy love abides,
Our God for evermore.

—[John W. Chadwick.

Wilderness Vagabond.

Your well-kept ways seem to call unto me never—
Keen above the roar of town comes the whisper of the West;
My feet, though aweary, turn unto the blind trails ever,
And nightfall always finds me 'twixt the prairie and the crest.

Your granite paths leave my spirit sore and bleeding,
Bruised is my soul, and with pity droops my heart;
The faces in the streets, cruel, greedy, stern and pleading,
Seem to stare from out my fire, though I camp far from the mart.

So let me roam, though I call no brother debtor,
Though the game that you call life wrests no toll of strength from me;
Idler I'm dubbed—let it pass for want of better—
But gild your chains in vain—they appeal not to the free!

LITTLE NEMO IN SLUMBERLAND

Some Matters of Especial Interest to the Women.

The Making of a Successful Wife.

By C. S. Yost.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

X—RAISING A FAMILY.

MY DEAR LITTLE GIRL: I don't wonder that you feel a terrible weight of responsibility resting on you just now. This matter of raising a family—I reckon they taught you to say "rearing" at college—is a serious proposition any way you take it. But I wouldn't worry about it if I were you. There will be a whole lot of bridges on the way, but you won't have to cross but one at a time, and you won't have to cross any until you get to it. They'll wait for you, all right. They never get washed away by floods. And they're never as hard to get over as they look to be at a distance. So don't fret about the future, my dear. You remember the old housewife saying: "Here's Monday, tomorrow's Tuesday, and the next day's Wednesday, a whole week gone and nothin' done." That's the spirit that makes some old before their time, that puts crow's feet in skin that ought to be smooth as silk. Today's labors and today's troubles are enough for today. And yet, honey, it's all right and proper to look ahead, to plan and consider, but not to worry. It's all right and proper to figure on little John William's future, but it's all wrong to let your plans pile up into burdens on the present. Just keep that idea fixed in your little noggin' while I give you some home-made views on the raising of John William.

In the first place, little girl, you want to recognize the fact that your baby is a boy and the main object of your training should be to make a man of him. If he lives long enough he'll get the requisite number of years, he'll get big enough to wear full grown trousers and he'll find it necessary to call on the barber occasionally, all without much help from you. But it takes more than that to make a man. You can see lots of very good imitations of men walking up and down the street any day, but real men are scarce, and I want my grandson to be a real man—a man with backbone and self-reliance and courage; upright, truthful and just; square in his dealings with others; having the fear of the Lord but no other fear in his heart; courteous and gentle and kind, particularly to women, old men and children; lending not only a hand but a head and a heart to those in distress. It takes all that to make a real man, a genuine gentleman, and I've seen mighty few of that kind in this world who wasn't the product of a mother who knew her business. Once in a long while the good Lord, for some purpose of His own, turns out a first-class man without any apparent human help, but it isn't often, and it won't do for mother and father to idly and piously fold their hands and trust in Providence. That kind of trust ain't any account until you have done the best you can with the job.

So, honey, it's up to you and William to make a man out of the kid, and the biggest share of the making falls on you, for in the raising of a family a father isn't usually good for much except the heavy standing around. At any rate, he won't cut any figure in the game for several years yet, and the time to commence work is right now. You can't begin the training of a child too early. I've seen many a baby hopelessly spoiled before it was a month old, and the first one is much more apt to get a false start than the later ones. It's wonderful how much intelligence there is in a little, bald-headed, red-faced, stump-nose kid not three days old, and it is equally remarkable how easy it is to get that intelligence working in the wrong direction at that early age. Little John William says to himself, "I find by experience that if I holler long enough and loud enough I'll get anything I want." Therefore he hollers, and unless you give him to understand, gently but firmly, that this theory of his is entirely incorrect and based upon false premises, he'll continue to holler, and you and William will have to dance to his whistle through many a weary day and many a sleepless night. But the worst feature of this false start is not in the discomfort it brings to his parents. It is the influence it has upon his character. For character building, my dear, like any other building, has to begin at the foundation, and defects in the foundation are more dangerous and harder to remedy than faults anywhere in the superstructure. So begin on little John William now, honey, before he gets the bit between his teeth, or his gums, and runs away with you.

When I was a boy I had a colt once that I was very proud of. It was a jim dandy colt, pretty as a picture and smart as a steel trap; but I waited too long to break it, let it have its own way until it wouldn't have any other way, and the first time I tried to ride it, it struck off across the meadow like a delayed telegram. All my pulling and sawing and shouting didn't make a bit of impression on him, and he went on and on, getting faster all the time until he came to a stake and rider rail fence. Then he stuck his forefeet in the ground and stopped. But I didn't. I just sailed on over that fence and landed in the middle of a blackberry patch. That blamed colt never would let anybody ride him. But if I'd commenced with him at the right time he would have made one of the best horses that ever came off the blue grass. And it's the same way with a child. Let him once get the idea fixed in his head that what he wants he must have, and that papa and mamma are just overgrown servants, whose business is to see that he gets it, and it's ten chances to one that he will never be either a man or a mouse or a long-tailed rat, as the saying goes. No, my dear, when John William hollers without apparent reason just let him holler. It won't hurt him. On the contrary, it's a wise provision of nature for the expansion and development of the lungs. And while he's taking physical culture exercises he's learning a few things that will be valuable to him later on. It's mighty important, it's absolutely essential, that he gets on to the fact right now that the world wasn't made for his amusement, and that mamma and not he is the boss of the ranch.

That little matter settled, you'll find the rest of the way comparatively easy; but unless it is settled, and settled for keeps, the road to Dublin won't be a circumstance for rocks. Do you remember the old example of the horseshoe nail in your arithmetic, the one that shows the wonders of arithmetical progression? Well, that's just the way the difficulty of settling that question increases every day you postpone it. That's why I lay so much stress on the importance of doing it now. I know he's such a precious little cherub, so cute and cunning, and all that sort of thing. It's mighty hard to deny him anything he wants, but you should keep before you all the time, my dear, not what he is but what he is to be.

You know when a sculptor is making a model, for a statue he has to have moist clay and he has to keep it moist. Unless he does he can't give it the form he desires. It's just so with your baby. Unless he is plastic, so to speak, you can never mold him to your will. Unless he learns the lesson of obedience you can never give his character that form which is the essence of real manhood. The making of a man is a big job, but if obedience is made the foundation it isn't so very difficult. And yet obedience mustn't be supine submission. A child must be taught to obey because the commands are just and right, and when needs be, he should be shown why they are just and right. His spirit is to be trained and developed, not crushed. I never had any patience with the old-time method of raising children, which was nothing less than tyranny. It was a whole lot better than the modern way of unbridled license, but it wasn't right.

A child should be treated as a being endowed with reason and should be taught to do right because it is right, not because a mother or a father commands it. That, of course, makes it necessary for him to know right from wrong, and you can't put in too much time giving him that knowledge. Teach your boy to be truthful and honest and courteous, and show him why he should be so. Don't make the mistake, however, of holding up the fear of punishment as the chief reason. A boy who does right because he is afraid to do wrong is in a fair way to become a coward, if he isn't one already. On the contrary, show him that these virtues distinguish the real man from the imitation. A man may possess courage and backbone and physical strength and yet be no better than many four-legged brutes. Genuine manhood is a mental rather than a physical condition. Muscle is highly desirable, and I hope John William will have plenty of it, but don't let him get the notion in his head that that is all he needs. A boy is naturally a good deal of a savage and has the savage's admiration for strength. Lots of us older boys haven't got very far away from primitive ideas in that particular, but all the same it's a matter of mighty small importance in the making of manhood compared with the attributes of mind.

These are just general principles, my dear. You can't make any rules that will fit all cases and you hardly ever find two children exactly alike in their dispositions. Methods of training must be adapted to each individual. A slipper or a shingle judiciously applied to the right spot will work wonders in many cases while it's worse than useless in others. Study your boy as you never studied any lesson in your life, and mold his mind and his character according to the material you find you have to work with, always keeping in mind the one definite aim, the making of a man.

This is a serious subject, little girl, and I have treated it seriously; but if you go at it right, and begin at the commencement, you will find this training of a child one of the greatest joys of life. There is nothing as beautiful as the gradual unfolding of the mind of a little one and there is no task so noble and ennobling as that which gives proper direction to its development. But start now, honey, start now. Don't put it off till next year. Your affectionate father,

JOHN SNEED.

Equal to the Emergency.

"Yes," said Mrs. Holcomb at the club, when the conversation had strayed from the latest novel to more domestic topics, "that green girl of Mrs. Cooper's is a fearful trial to her.

"Mrs. Cooper went to the kitchen one Sunday morning, when she was expecting some particular guests to dinner, and she found, to her horror, that the girl had cut her perfectly splendid big turkey all up into pieces, because she supposed by the size of it that it must be a particularly old and tough chicken. She was going to stew it!"

"Horrors!" exclaimed Mrs. Bassett, shocked at the indignity thrust upon high-priced turkey. "What in the world did Mrs. Cooper do?"

"Why," returned Mrs. Holcomb, soberly, "you know how clever she is with her needle? Well, she sewed that bird together again, and when he was roasted you wouldn't have known that anything had happened."

"But didn't the seams draw apart?"

"No," explained Mrs. Holcomb. "She featherstitched every one of them with brown silk."—[Home Magazine.

What Women Do in Chile.

There are some oddities in Chile connected with the sphere of woman that deserve mention. One is that women act as conductors on the street cars. Everywhere the passenger meets the woman conductor armed with her bag, and, as Mark Twain had it, "the blue trip-slip for a five-cent fare," collecting the coins fully as well as her masculine competitor, and much more politely. In the shoe stores all the "salesmen" are girls and women, and in the telegraph offices in city and country young women are invariably found as operators. And they do their work well, too. But to offset this, in a Chilean hotel or boarding-house, and in many residences, men do the work of the chambermaid. American ladies are always shocked to find that a manservant "takes care" of the sleeping rooms in the hotels of Chile."—[From "Haroun al Rashid in South America," by Sandy Broad.

Fair Play.

An attaché of the American embassy at London tells a story of a butler in the employ of a fine old English family, whose long service had inculcated in him a personal and proprietary interest in the sons and daughters of the house.

Once, on the occasion of a large dinner party, the conscientious butler observed that one of the members of the family, a young girl who had but recently entered society, was devoting an amount of attention to her agreeable neighbor on the right, obviously in excess of that accorded to the less fascinating man on her left. This fact perturbed the butler to a degree that could no longer be borne in silence. So, under pretense of passing the culprit a dish, the butler managed to whisper respectfully in her ear:

A Dressy Woman.

BY W. D. COWLEY.

Start not, gentle reader, fair reader. I am not going to lecture thee on the vanity of arraying thine outward man or woman in the garments of the gay and worldly. There is, no doubt, enough and too much of this in the world; but my aim just now is not a bird of this feather. Perhaps thou and I will agree—perhaps not. Nevertheless, I shall tell my thoughts on the matter before us, most honestly, whether thou shalt chance to like them or not. What I shall say may seem to have a special bearing on the fairer part of human kind; but such a reference is only a matter of convenience; I intended not thereby to exclude man from the benefit of my observations.

I shall begin—the second time—by saying that I always love to look upon a well-dressed woman; and who does not—unless it be some miserly curmudgeon, to whom the rustle of a new bank note is vastly more pleasing than that of silks and satins? Some sour religionist, in whom what little perception of the beautiful God had given him has long ago been crushed, and who strives to set religion and good taste by the ears and would make those fall out by the way who should walk lovingly together, may affect to decry any special attention to the covering of the outward man, and may seem horrified at the idea of adorning it. "The inward man," they say, "is the great thing to be cared for." True enough, no doubt; but then, as a general thing, I have never seen the souls of such people to be any better dressed than their bodies. The ornament of a meek and quiet spirit has been wanting quite as often as those which are of less price.

Now, by "well-dressed," I do not mean bejewelled, besilked, belaced or befeathered. "Well-dressed" may exist without any of these. It may be found in calico, in ginghams, or in check in a cottage as well as in a palace. A well-cut, prettily colored, entirely-put-on and tidily-kept garment—this is "well-dressed," and this may be attained with almost any material. The richest silks on earth, the most gorgeous dyes, the most resplendent jewels, will not of necessity make a well-dressed woman. No; good taste may be wanting after all—a spirit of order, of harmonious arrangement, possessed of an instinctive power in detecting incongruities, and of discerning the little proprieties which go to make up a well-dressed person.

As you have looked out upon this fair earth, have you not often thought: How gloriously is nature dressed? The Divine Clothier—I speak it reverently—how doth he clothe the grass of the field. How doth he deck the lily of the valley? Solomon was gorgeously arrayed, no doubt, but not as one of these. And the trees with their rich foliage, the birds with their heaven-dyed dresses of plumes, and the beasts in their coats of skin so fitted and so put on—ah, here is clothing for you!

Hast thou ever noticed the morning dress of nature? The clouds are decked in all gay and fantastic humors, and the bosom of the earth is gemmed with dewdrop diamonds truly of the first water. Everything smiles around you. 'Tis a sight worth the seeing. And then, too, in her evening dress. The gildings, the burnishings, the sparkling gems are laid aside. She is clad in twilight's gray and sober livery, as our divine poet sings. The curtains of darkness are drawn around her, she retires from sight, as it were, to rest until the light of another day shall awake her from her slumbers. Thus is nature beautifully, appropriately appareled; and why shall not thou and I dress as well as we may? Where is the harm in it, if we take some pains to have our clothes well-made, of good materials, and well put on?

Our first parent's first suit was, we are told, of skins. Now, it is by no means clear that they were rough and shaggy skins, as some would have us believe. Only fancy beauteous Eve in such a dress; in some shaggy bear-skin, or some woolly sheepskin. The association is horrible. These coats of skin may have been of quite refined material; perchance some fabric made of the skin or bark of some tree. He who had decked Eden for them doubtless now clothed them becomingly and tastefully. Why not? He maketh every thing beautiful. I can as easily believe this as the contrary.

There has always seemed to me a sort of naturalness about a well-dressed woman—just as though she were made for it. She appears as much in her place as a rose in a garden, as part of the constitution of things. The Graces forbid that we should think any the less of one who is scrupulously attentive to her personal appearance, earnestly striving to render it as pleasing to her best friends as possible. And suppose she wear a few ornaments, what then? If judiciously chosen, so much the better. I enjoy a few modest flowers in the bonnet, a ring on the hand, and it may be, a neat and pretty brooch—not indeed so large as to remind one of the shield of Norval (shield us from such,) but of moderate dimensions. In all this, she appears to be fulfilling a part of her mission to this world. Was she not sent to aid in the adorning of it? For the uttering of such sentiments as these, I may be considered by some as no better than one of the world. I am content. Some powerful declamation at church I have heard on this subject; yet, notwithstanding the eloquence of the preacher, and his solemn warnings, I could not, for the life of me, refrain from dwelling with some degree of complacency on the prettily-attired forms around me; and I have sometimes thought that the good man himself, as his eyes rested upon them, felt half inclined to take another text and hold forth on the other side.

One of the cloth (a good man he was) I well remember. His wife was one of the best-dressed women in the parish, setting in this, as I thought, a wholesome example to all careless and slovenly wives. The good man (peace to him) was by no means deficient in the duty of touching up the gay members of his congregation upon the danger of too much attention to outward adornments, yet (to let you into the secret) he always seemed well pleased with the appearance of his wife. Some of the more censorious among us did indeed intimate that she was not quite spiritual enough, and a little too much devoted to the merely outward. But there are ill-natured people everywhere. If she was a little fond of dress, she was none the worse for it. (This on the principle that too much of a good thing is good for nothing.) If fault it is, it made her appear very lively; and as to her spirituality, all I can say is the spirit of neatness reigned over her person, the spirit of order in her house, the spirit of a lady in her manners, the spirit of charity in her intercourse with others, the spirit of prudence in her domestic economy, the spirit of meekness under trying provocations, and the spirit of contentment with her lot. This sort of spirituality is worth a great deal more than much that goes by that name. If what is often called spiritdality is made an excuse for untidiness, slovenliness—if it opposes itself to care for one's personal appearance, to a proper taste in one's dress, I shall at once dispute its heavenly origin and consider it but as an interloper among the Christian graces—a daw in borrowed feathers.

Being myself in the body, and the souls of others here in this world being in the body, I must needs have much to do with bodies. As I come in contact with them constantly, and with some of them closely, it is a matter of some importance to me in what condition they may happen to be. One could hardly consent to have them neglected for the sake of the (so-called) intellectual culture. An intellectualist; an intellectual sloven, what an unrighteous association!

Truly, a dressy woman (as the phrase goes) is better than a slattern. There may be something positively pleasing about the former; but the latter, is something positively disgusting. If she possess beauty of face, the pleasure of looking upon it is neutralized by the untidiness of her apparel; whereas, plain or even homely features are somewhat redeemed by a well-chosen and a well-fitted dress. A dressy wife may cost you a few extra dollars per annum; but then she has something to show for it, and in spite of the drain upon your pocket you will be pleased. You will be indemnified in part, at least, for the bleeding of your purse by the consideration that your better half will not be likely to subject you to mortification on account of her appearance. Here, then, is something in the shape of value received; not a receipt in full of all demands, it may be, but a sort of compounding some few shillings in the pound.

I must back again to the parson's wife—blessings on her. The most determined grumblers in the parish always admitted that if she was somewhat given to the ways of the world in the matter of her dress, yet her house was a very model of neatness.

"Everything," said they, "is in perfect order from cellar to garret; to do her justice" (they had no sense of justice,) "like waxwork, and her children always look well."

Now, have you not noticed that they who are a little fond of dress—something tasteful as to cut and color, neat and trim—are generally the best housekeepers? And no great marvel. She who studies neatness, order and beauty in her apparel will be likely to study them in connection with the affairs of her household. A sort of elegance will reign throughout her abode, even as there does over her person.

A person possessing a genuine taste as to matters of dress is always well dressed—not only when she "goes out," but at home. She evidently seems to have an idea of this kind; that her husband (if she be blessed with one) has some claim upon her efforts to please. She would appear within herself, "'Tis only husband." Ah, yes. 'Tis truly only he whom thou shouldst be most solicitous to please. Wilt thou say, "'Tis but a small thing—a mere matter of dress—why should he care?" My mistaken friend, dost thou not know that life is made up mostly of small things—indoor life at least, domestic life, thy life? Dost thou not know that the small things of life are the hinges whereon the great ones turn? Put not off the matter thus. On this small hinge—dress—may turn the great matter of thy husband's domestic peace and comfort. Didst thou do thus when he wooed thee? Didst thou say "'Tis only he?" Let thy memory make answer. What tales thy glass could tell of those times? And you, my friend, the husband, if you have a wife, a woman of taste, of refinement, consider it, I beseech you. Do you say "'Tis only she?" This was not so in the days of courtship. What a sprucing-up of yourself. No unshaven chin then; no unwashed hands; no uncleanly raiment then. Why not always seek to appear well in each other's eyes? Is the market made? Will affection and respect now take care of themselves? Does marriage change the nature and the means of love? Does it make a man fond of a slattern, or a woman fond of a sloven? Did the lover admire order and neatness, and has the wife or husband fallen in love with disorder? It is a great mistake, my friends; a great mistake. I have read somewhere of a people who are accustomed to wear their best clothes at home. If this custom were adopted among ourselves, what a different aspect it would impart to some households. We might appear rather indifferent, perhaps, abroad. Our old duds might give a rather strange look to our streets; but, then, all these would be laid aside the moment we entered our own doors.

We should don "our best" and sit down at our own firesides pleased with ourselves and with each other. The temptation, too, to go abroad would be less, and thus it would be more easy to comply with the apostolic precept to be "keepers at home." Home would then keep us. I bethink me now of another apostolic precept which seems to discourage attention to dress. It speaks slightingly of the braiding of hair, and the putting on of apparel, and commends the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. Think you that Peter seriously meant that a woman should never braid her hair, should never literally put on apparel? Mercy save us! no, not this last, surely. What, then, does he mean? I think it must be an excessive fondness for dress—that's all. If we dress according to our analogy of nature (a Butler has it,) we should dress as well as we can, according to our condition in life. He who has clothed the earth so beautifully, and has given us to perceive and enjoy it, can never have intended that we should not bring in to exercise, in connection with the clothing of ourselves, the conception of the beautiful implanted in our natures. It must be a strange taste which prefers the untasteful for its own sake. It is not natural. Leave people to their choice, and ninety-nine out of a hundred will choose as an associate, other things being equal, the best (in the best sense of the word) dressed person. If I were to put another petition in the prayer-book, it should be somewhat as follows: "From all slatterns, from all slovens, good Lord, deliver us."

A Spanish Supper.

HOW TO PREPARE DISHES FOR A COMPANY OF SIX.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

A pleasing way of entertaining one's friends who are sojourning in our midst, is to give them a supper suggestive of the good old days and ways "before the Gringo came." The menu should consist entirely of those piquant dishes with which we who dwell in this fair land have become familiar, and have formed a decided liking for. Those of us are fortunate, indeed, who can count among our friends a skilled Spanish señora, willing to initiate us into the secrets of preparing her native dishes, rendering us capable of making and serving them in our own homes. Those less favored must depend upon the tried recipes of others. Just at this rainy season, when our accustomed sunshine is likely to be wanting, such a little supper may be made the most delightful affair imaginable. The table decorations should carry out the conventional Spanish colors, not necessarily all three of them, but green and red, or green and yellow. Feathery ferns and either deep red roses, carnations or even geraniums are handsome flowers for such an occasion; though nothing can be more appropriate than California poppies and maidenhair fern, when they can be obtained.

Among the requisites for Spanish cookery are always to be found chiles, both green and ripe, garlic, dry onions, tomatoes, canned or fresh, and oregano (Spanish sage.) Indeed, the term Spanish is now applied to any dish found to be hot with red pepper, so closely has this fervid vegetable become associated in the public mind with the savory concoctions of Spain. Dry chiles are such a wholesome and stimulating ingredient in everyday cookery that it is quite as common for the American housewife to keep a string of them among her supplies, as it is for the native. There is a preparation of ground up chiles called "Chile Powder, the 20th Century Flavor," that in many households is taking the place of the dry vegetable, on account of the simplicity with which it may be used. But in its preparation the skins are powdered along with the seeds, both of which are judiciously rejected when making chile sauce from the whole pods.

In the following menu, enchiladas have been chosen for the piece de résistance, instead of the more well-known tamales, for the reason that the corn husks of the latter are unsightly at a daintily appointed table. From a dietetic standpoint, where food of such richness is served, some simple, harmless dish should be found—plain bread and butter sandwiches, or dainty wafers—for guests who confess to the weakness of indigestion. To all such sufferers, a special note should be sounded, warning them against the delicious but offending fried green chile!

The provident hostess, wishing to end her feast with a light and wholesome dessert, can select nothing simpler than currant cream. The little empanadas are for those accustomed to our great American favorite—pie.

CHILES RELLENOS (Green chiles stuffed and fried.)—In preparation, the green peppers should be carefully roasted in the oven or on top of a hot stove until the skin puffs up. Then roll them up in a damp towel until the skin becomes lose enough to peel off easily. Two dozen should be peeled in this way, the pods should be cut open lengthwise down one side, and the seeds removed. For the filling, chop together three medium-sized dry onions and one-half pound of Eastern cheese; salt to taste and fill the peppers, one by one. Take six eggs, beat the whites and yolks separately until light, and add a little salt, and a tablespoonful of flour. Have ready a frying pan of hot lard, sufficient to cover the stuffed pods. Dip each pepper in the egg batter and fry until light brown. Whatever of batter is left may be poured over the peppers when they are turned. For the sauce, fry one clove or garlic (crushed) in about two tablespoonfuls of lard. Remove the garlic when brown. Place in the hot lard three large tomatoes and one onion chopped together, season with salt, pepper, one teaspoonful oregano, a little chopped parsley and one dozen olives. Stew for twenty minutes. Place the peppers on a platter, pour the sauce over them and serve hot.

FRIJOLES CON QUESO (Pink beans with cheese.)—Cook three cups of pink beans until tender, season with salt and pepper. Place two even tablespoonfuls of lard or bacon gravy in a frying pan; when hot, fry the beans, using enough hot water to keep them moist. Chop one-half pound of cheese, stir through the beans until melted together. Serve hot.

TORTILLAS.—Make a tough dough, using three cups of flour, two tablespoonfuls of lard salted, and sufficient milk to permit of kneading. Though the true native style it to pat out pieces of dough in the hands until flat and round, it is far better to roll them out with the rolling pin. When about the size of a saucer, cook in a dry, hot pan on the top of the stove, turning each one over to brown on both sides. Butter and serve hot. These take the place of bread.

ENSALADA (Cebolla, chile y tomate.)—Six tomatoes, two onions and three green chiles; slice together and add salt, pepper, a little oregano, olive oil, vinegar and ten chopped olives. Mix well and serve cold in individual dishes.

ENCHILADAS—Boil two pounds of yellow corn with one tablespoonful of lime, until the hulls become loose. Place corn in cold water and rub until all the skins are removed. Change the water several times—three at least. If the corn cannot be ground in a metate, it may be run through a coffee mill, or a fine meat grinder, but do not use "store" meal. Prepare a dough of the ground corn by adding one cup of wheat flour, salted, a small lump of lard and enough water to moisten. Knead the dough until well mixed. Roll out into a sheet an inch thick; slice in strips about five inches long by two inches wide, and let dry a few moments. Fry in hot lard until the strips puff up, then remove from the lard and set aside.

Now prepare the chile sauce by removing the seeds and veins from one dozen large red chiles. Boil the peppers in hot water until the pulp is tender. Take from the fire and scrape the pulp clean from the skins, using a spoon or fork. Throw away the skins and boil up the pulp in the water in which it was cooked. Add one teaspoonful of oregano, one teaspoonful of vinegar, one tablespoonful of olive oil and salt to taste. Mix together and boil until of the consistency of cream. Have ready one pound of finely chopped eastern cheese and four chopped onions of medium size. In serving place two sticks of the fried corn meal on a plate, with two other sticks across them, leaving space between. Now place over the sticks a tablespoonful of the chopped cheese, a teaspoonful of the chopped onion and six olives on the top. Over all, pour a generous supply of chile sauce and set in the oven for a short time before serving.

OSTRAS A LA ESPANOLA (Oysters)—Take three dozen large oysters, dry in a towel and roll in cracker crumbs. Prepare a batter from six eggs, two tablespoonfuls of flour, the whites and yolks beaten separately until stiff, and seasoned with salt and pepper. Cover each oyster with the batter and fry in hot lard. For the sauce, chop together three small onions, one green chile and two tomatoes; add pepper, salt, a little butter and stew until done. Pour the sauce over the fried oysters and serve hot.

EMPANADAS—For these little individual turnovers, make a flaky pie crust after your favorite recipe, roll thin and cut out in round pieces the size of a saucer. Put one tablespoonful of raspberry jam in each half of paste, fold over the other half and press the edges of the half circle together with a fork. Prick a few times, and bake in a quick oven. These are frequently fried, but in that way they are not so wholesome as baked. When done, sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve cold with the dessert.

CURRANT CREAM. Whip a pint of double cream to a stiff froth; add a cup of powdered sugar and the whites of two eggs beaten to a snow. Then add a teaspoonful at a time, two-thirds of a glass of current jelly, continue to beat until the jelly is thoroughly incorporated and the mass is very light. Serve in glasses with a tiny round of jelly on the top.

PINOCHE—Two cupfuls of brown sugar, one cup of maple sugar, one cup of hot water and one-half teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Dissolve over a slow fire, stirring constantly. Then boil over a quick fire until a little of the mixture forms a soft ball when tried in cold water. Put in two cupfuls of rolled walnut meat, remove from the fire and stir until it becomes a thick, creamy mass. Pour out in buttered platters, mark in squares and let cool. When cold break in squares and serve in a dainty cut glass dish. Brown and maple sugars are a good substitute for the real Mexican sugar; sometimes the genuine article may be obtained of Mexican grocers, though seldom.

SALTED ALMONDS—Blanch a half pound of shelled almonds and dry on a towel. Put six tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan over the fire. When melted add the almonds and fry until delicately brown, stirring constantly to brown the nuts evenly. Remove from the pan with a spoon, taking up as little fat as possible; drain on blotting paper, and sprinkle with fine salt.

CHOCOLATE A LA ESPANOL—This delicious Aztec creation has endured in its popularity for nearly four centuries and the Spaniards, through whom it was revealed to us, still hold first place in its brewing. For twelve cups (two for each at the table) put two quarts of rich milk to boil in a double boiler. In another boiler place twelve squares of sweetened chocolate, with one and one-half cups of warm water to dissolve; stir the chocolate constantly until thoroughly hot. Slowly puor the boiling milk into the heated chocolate and permit the mixture to boil together about five minutes. Have ready four eggs, the whites and yolks beaten separately until very light, afterward beat together. To these whipped eggs add the boiling chocolate and beat the entire mixture with an egg beater until ready for the table. A rich and nutritious beverage is the result. History tells us that the Aztecs used cinnamon instead of eggs to attain the final smoothness of flavor of their chocolatl, as they chose to call it, and that they also beat it thoroughly with a palito, immediately before serving.

THE LUNCH BASKET.

Some Valuable Suggestion for the Packing of an Appetizing Cold Meal.

[Home Magazine:] There is a phrase about a man not being able to add to his stature by taking thought thereon, but when it comes to planning a daily lunch menu, it is only by taking thought that an exasperating monotony is avoided. It is advisable, in the first place, to study the known preferences of the partaker, and not only offer such dishes as he is especially fond of, but for variety prepare new or unusual forms of the ordinary "standbys," that the daily lunch may be no cause for lack of appetite.

The first requisite in the preparation of a lunch is the assembling of materials, and a prime essential is a strong, serviceable basket that shall yet be attractive, for daintiness is the keynote in preparing appetizing lunches. If a box is more satisfactory, let it be clean and lined with new white [illegible]

When it is not expedient to [illegible] basket or small box, at least [illegible] the eatables are daintily wrapped promiscuously jumbled into a [illegible] newspaper. One is surprised [illegible] times almost disgusted to [illegible] method employed by many [illegible] who are fastidious in other [illegible] and it is amazing that they [illegible] any relish at all when [illegible] pickles, a banana and possibly a boiled potato are tied in a [illegible] without other wrapping. Every one should know that straw, [illegible] employed in the manufacture of [illegible] together with rags and refuse [illegible] is not a cheerful thought [illegible] things we eat come in direct [illegible] with them for several hours, [illegible] moisture from the viands [illegible] or less ink to be absorbed, and, [illegible] not necessarily harmful, it is [illegible] petizing, to say the least.

When lunches are to be [illegible] even a week, it is well to provide [illegible] sirable accessories—white [illegible] and a quantity of good white [illegible] paper. The latter may be [illegible] a print shop in various sized [illegible] in the long roll that newspapers [illegible] comes in. Indeed, here is a [illegible] for the economical housekeeper, [illegible] paper is destrable for a variety of [illegible] No paper is more [illegible] kitchen and pantry shelves [illegible] sizes of white paraffin paper [illegible] sheets may be purchased [illegible] store and cut the desired [illegible] aluminum drinking cup, [illegible] and either white enamel or [illegible] celain cups to hold custards, [illegible] etc., if a screw-top jelly glass [illegible] preferred—and always a supply [illegible] paper napkins.

If the bread is buttered or [illegible] in sandwiches there will be no [illegible] a knife, and unless there is a [illegible] sauce or soft custard no spoon [illegible] required. It is often advisable [illegible] the cheap white metal spoons [illegible] forks and throw them away [illegible] as they become discolored.

In packing the basket arrange [illegible] contents in the order in which [illegible] will be served, i. e., fruits [illegible] and cake at the bottom, with the [illegible] stantials on top. Each piece should be [illegible] wrapped separately in a piece of [illegible] affin paper, and anything very [illegible] into a glass or cup or small [illegible] pail.

The sandwich is generally the [illegible] of the meal, and with the great [illegible] ety now made there can be a [illegible] every day for at least two weeks, [illegible] and often one can devise combinations [illegible] that are especially attractive to the [illegible] family. But guard against [illegible] a favorite by too frequent use.

The bread may be white, [illegible] wheat, graham, Boston brown, [illegible] rolls, biscuit, cold muffins, [illegible] corn pone. Often one prefers to [illegible] put in a dish to itself and then [illegible] simply buttered. Any kind of [illegible] minced fine makes a good filling.

Among the fillings for [illegible] possible at this season, the following [illegible] are suggested: Dates, chopped [illegible] seasoned lightly with ground [illegible] cinnamon; Dutch cheese and [illegible] nuts, or cheese with chopped [illegible] cold baked beans mashed to a [illegible] and seasoned with celery salt and [illegible] tard; olives chopped fine and [illegible] with mayonnaise; minced [illegible] salt and pepper; chopped [illegible] other nuts mixed with mayonnaise [illegible] French dressing; raisins or [illegible] with nut meats; any kind of [illegible] malade, jam or jelly; preserved [illegible] minced very fine; sour apples [illegible] ery chopped very fine and mixed [illegible] salad dressing; grated cheese [illegible] chopped pickles seasoned with [illegible] pepper, mustard and anchovy [illegible] cold fried oysters minced, with [illegible] dressing; cabbage very finely [illegible] with salad dressing; thinly sliced [illegible] bananas with lemon juice and [illegible] naise; minced hard-boiled eggs [illegible] sardines mashed to a paste, [illegible] cheese, mustard, chopped celery, [illegible] kind of cold cooked meat, minced [illegible] mixed with any sort of salad [illegible] anchovy paste, lemon juice, [illegible] eatsup, mustard, minced pickles [illegible] or parsley; Neufchatel cheese softened with sweet cream, seasoned [illegible] salt and pepper, and mixed [illegible] chopped pecan nuts.

Small cakes and cookies [illegible] change from layer or loaf cake, [illegible] generous slice of fresh gingerbread [illegible] sure to be welcomed. Salted [illegible] bunch of raisins, a few figs, a [illegible] or sack of fresh popcorn are [illegible] to top off with.

Passing of the Elbow Sleeve.

There is every indication that the reign of the elbow sleeve is [illegible] to a close. The sleeves on [illegible] gowns are short, but come [illegible] the elbow, and the close [illegible] of tucked chiffon and lace [illegible] them still more. POLLY SLEEPYHEAD

DRAWN BY PETER NEWELL.

No. 1—Tom and two other lads had been amusing themselves by throwing sticks into the pond for Nero to bring to shore. But they soon tired of this sport and were ready for something new. "Wait, fellers," said Tom, "I'll go get Polly and show you how Nero'll give her a ducking."

No. 2—The boys did not have long to wait before Tom brought his sister on the scene. "Now, Polly," said Tom, "we're going to play we're in the Alps. I'll tie Nero's rope round your waist and you take that pole in your hand for an Alpenstock and be a guide hunting for us kids lost in the snow."

No. 3—As soon as Tom had finished tying the rope and Polly had taken the pole provided her, he picked up a stick and hurled it far out into the pond. Nero pricked up his ears, for he liked nothing better than to dash into the water after floating objects.

No. 4—The moment the stick struck the water Nero bolted for the pond, dragging Polly after him! And her pole, which she happened to hold in a horizontal position, swept the three conspirators along with her.

No. 5—Nero plunged into the pond and the terrified lads were hurled into the water! But Polly was saved by the two ends of her pole catching on some convenient saplings that grew near the water's edge.

No. 6—Then the intelligent dog seized Tom by the collar and dragged him to shore, while his companions in misery clambered up the bank. Ha-ha-ha!" laughed Polly. "Ei-deiweis-yodle-Jungfrau! I vas glad me and my faithful dog vas come in time to save you!"

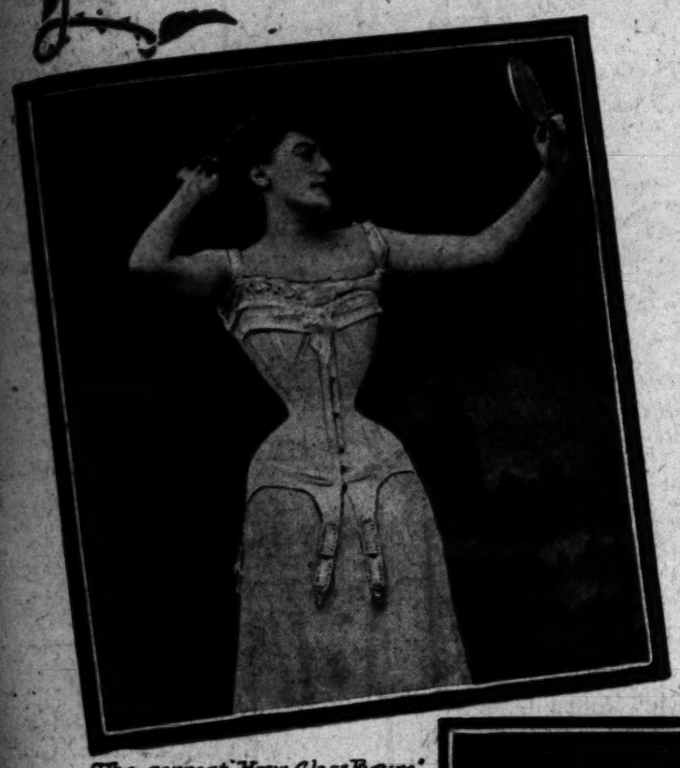
SOME OF THE CORSETS PARIS WOMEN ARE WEARING



The correct Hour Glass Figure.

Bones cut very short at hip line.

Bones are used sparingly.

High Busted corset for Automobiling

DOCTORS may rail and a few compliant women take heed, but the corset still preserves its time-honored place as one of the most important factors of woman's dress. Decry it as you will, "the human form divine" (that is, if of the feminine gender) "unstayed," is generally a sorry spectacle. This may be due to perverted taste, it may express a wide departure from artistic canons; but it is the popular modern view of the subject despite the health crank and the artist, and we might as well become reconciled to it.

It does not need a visit to a dressmakers' annual meeting, or pictures of the before and after "straight front" type, to make evident the somewhat humiliating part the corset plays in a woman's appearance. An ordinarily careful observer can tell almost in passing whether a woman patronizes a good "corsetiere" or not. A figure naturally good may be ruined by a poor corset, while the woman thin almost to shapelessness need not despair does her allowance permit of well-made stays.

The Parisienne, more than all other women, realizes the importance of buying really good corsets. It is one part of her outfit on which she never economizes; indeed, she sometimes pays a price for a corset that to many an American would seem quite disproportionate to her income—in fact, rank extravagance. But the Frenchwoman makes a science of dressing. She knows her good points and bad both as to face and figure, and invariably puts her money where it will tell most. She has learned that half (enthusiasts on the influence of a corset say the whole) the secret of a well-fitting gown and a graceful carriage lies in the corset. She selects it with the greatest care, having it made whenever possible, otherwise buying the models best adapted to enhance the beauty of her figure.

The results of the French woman's solicitude about her stays has made Paris the Mecca of corset manufacturers all over the world. Here originate the novelties and improvements that have turned the corset from the stiff box of steel or wood worn in the Middle Ages by our ancestors, both men and women, to the supple, pliant, lightly-boned mechanism of today, exquisite of fabric and trimming and beautiful as to lines.

The modern corset is built on the most approved hygienic principles. A woman's physical wellbeing is taken into consideration by the manufacturer. Even though Fashion may dictate "the hour-glass" figure, as she is doing again just now, the woman who yields to those demands need not sacrifice her health in her wish to be in style.

That "hour-glass" figure, by the way, has a remarkable faculty for sneaking back into favor just when the critics feel it has been banned forever under the weight of their disapproval. Fortunately, however, the belle of today who aims to emulate "the nut-brown maiden with the slender, slender waist" need not resort to the heroic methods of her grandmother.

Despite what its opponents say, tight lacing is practiced by few modern women of sense. They have learned too well the comfort of a deep breath, and have too intense a dread of a red nose. How many of this generation have ever tied themselves to a bedpost in order to gain an eighteen-inch waist? Yet that bedpost lacing was as much a part of the daily routine of dressing of a fascinating dame of fashion in the picturesque old days of powdered locks and gayly flowered stiff brocades as the putting on of her beauty patch or the blackening of her eyebrows.

How our ancestresses ever managed this lacing of their stays and still kept their beauty and nerves and did their duty as mothers is a mystery. We could not, so it is a blessing that the manufacturer, by a skilful manipulation of bones and cut, has managed to secure the effect of slimness without undue pressure.

For slimness—alas for the overstout who abhor diet and exercise!—is all the rage just now. This is especially evident in the cut of the new French corset for spring. Otherwise it shows no radical change. The new models accentuate slender lines and long hips, and the waist line is much more marked than for some seasons past. The bust also is high.

The back of the newest French corset is cut a trifle lower at the top, but is if possible longer below the waistline. The exception is a new corset made especially for automobiling; this is very high to support the shoulders, while it is less rigorously constructed about the hips.

The French corsetiere has discovered a very interesting point as regards long-hip effects, namely, that the results are more satisfactory and the hips appear much flatter if the bones are cut off very short, just at the hip line, leaving the sheath-like pieces quite supple and adding much to their gracefulness.

Bones are used throughout as sparingly as possible, and materials are as light as strength will permit. The corset with the webbing top, which was so successful as a dancing model, is being shown as one of the summer novelties.

Of novelties, by the way, there is the usual number—inviting to see, but not specially practical or generally adopted. Attracting most attention are those lacing at the sides; a petticoat and corset combined in princess fashion; a singer's corset that is cut away almost to the waist line in front, and a special shirtwaist corset for stout women which has stays over the shoulders and laces in front.

The French corset, besides being well cut, is generally a work of art as to material and trimmings. Among the newest fabrics used are plain batiste in plain colors that have the effect of taffeta, and tiny checks also expressing the taffeta idea. Trimmings vary from an elaborate embroidery of rococo ribbon work and bands of "broderie Anglaise" arranged in a bolero shape to a simple heading of fine valenciennes lace relieved by baby ribbon.

EACH AND ALL SOCIETY

CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK, PRESIDENT

The Kind of Husband I Would Choose for My Daughter.

I SAW a drunken woman lying on the street some weeks ago. I was just coming out of the house, and she had fallen on the sidewalk in front of the steps. She was a middle-aged woman, evidently poor, judging by her ragged, untidy garments, and just as evidently desperately drunk. She was struggling helplessly to get up.

As I paused, doubtful just what to do, a man came around the corner—a well-dressed man, about 30 years old. The struggling woman lay directly in his path. With as much courtesy as he would have shown to a beautiful young girl who had slipped and fallen, he stooped over her. "Can I help you?" he asked. She made some indistinct reply and clutched at his arm. Gently and kindly he lifted her to her feet. She caught at the wall of the building for support. "Wouldn't you like to sit on the steps?" he asked, and helped her to a seat on them. Then he lifted his hat and went on his way.

As I looked after him I said to myself, "If it were my son, or my brother, or my husband, or any other man in whom I was particularly interested who had done that thing, how proud I would be of him!" And then there was a second thought, "If I had a marriageable daughter, how happy I would be to have her marry a man like that!"

A TRUE MODERN KNIGHT

I shall probably never see the man again—I doubt if I would know him if I were to see him. But I shall always remember him as a sort of modern knight, helping the women who needed help, wherever he might happen to find them.

Girls, sometimes you ask me what sort of a man it is wise for a girl to marry. That is the sort I would recommend!

Of course you cannot always put a man to a test like that. Drunken women are all too common, but happily, they are not plentiful enough to make such an incident as I have told an everyday affair. Yet there are other tests to which a man may ring true that make him much better worth while as a husband than any of the showy graces that often render him attractive in the eyes of girls. I don't mean to make light of the graces, either. I like accomplishments and fine manners as well as any one, but I have seen men who could act like Chesterfields in a drawing room who would have walked scornfully by on the other side to get out of the way of such a poor old wretch as the one I saw.

There have been a great many definitions of the word "gentleman." It has been claimed by so many who have no right to it that it is hard to distinguish just what it means now. But a tolerably good working definition is that of a man who is considerate of others.

Do you see how much that includes? It covers gentleness of speech and courtesy to those in the family as well as to those outside. It comprises good manners in public, because anything less would show inconsiderateness. It does away with noisy behavior when it would be unpleasant to those about him. In fact, I know few things it does not include in the line of graces and attentions.

WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A GENTLEMAN

Years ago, when I was a young girl, I was traveling South in the company of a relative, a man much older than myself. We had gone part of the journey and changed cars before we started on the night trip, which was to be taken in a sleeping car. It was a hot day, and I had developed a bad sick headache. When we went into the station to order our berths we found, to our dismay, that the best we could do was to buy two upper berths.

I was in despair. It was impossible to stop over night, for we had to push on, and I was nearly distracted with my head. I sat forlornly in the seat, wishing with all my heart I was at home in my own bed, when my relative came up to me and said, cheerfully: "I have managed to get a lower berth for you. I found a man with one and he was willing to exchange."

I had my lower berth in comfort. Not until long afterward did I know that the dear man, who was old enough to be my father, had found two men who meant to share one lower berth between them, had offered our two upper berths in exchange and then had cheerfully sat up himself all night in a day coach.

That is another instance of what it means to be a gentleman.

I am afraid I am a little exacting in my demands as to what sort of a man I should wish my daughter—if I had one—to marry. I am very sure he should not be one of the men who keep their good manners for the benefit of those outside of their families. If I heard him speak unkindly to his mother or sister, disrespectfully to his father, harshly to a servant, I don't believe he would suit. If I saw that he wanted the best things at home for himself, that when there was extra company in the house his sisters or father might turn out of their rooms to accommodate the guests, while he could never be ousted from his own chamber for the sake of any one, I fancy I would feel inclined to tell him to look elsewhere for a wife and to leave my daughter alone. If I saw him unwilling to do errands in order to spare the women of the house, afraid to carry a parcel for fear it would compromise his dignity, ready to be waited upon and to shirk his own share of waiting, I know I would wish to give him his discharge. It would make no difference to me to whom he displayed his lack of consideration. In whatever quarter he exercised it, he would not do for my son-in-law.

Another story I recall of my younger years. I could not have been more than 14 at the time it happened, and we were spending the summer in an Adirondack resort. In the same hotel was a man of 30 and a college boy of 19 or 20, whom I knew well. One day we three went out on a tramp. It was two miles to the little village for which we were bound and two miles back. As we started my mother warned me that it would be a pretty long walk, and that I might have trouble in keeping up with the men of the party.

"Oh, no," I said with a very young girl's pride in being a good walker. "I will keep up with them all right."

Whereupon the two men deliberately set to work to make me retract my statement. They were both long-legged fellows—one six feet, the other six feet three inches tall. They set a killing pace of walking, and at their heels I trudged along. They evidently thought it an excellent joke, and if I had given in and begged off they would doubtless have accommodated their pace to mine. But I was a proud, stubborn little piece, and I would not have asked for consideration if I had dropped in my tracks. On we went, up hill and down—and, as I recall, it was a good deal more up than down, both coming and going! We reached the village, where I had supposed there would be a halt and a chance to recover wind. But no! They did their errand with fiendish celerity and started back home.

By the time we got half way there, or earlier, all the blood in my body was in my face. My heart was pumping as if run by steam, my head throbbing as though it would split. But we tramped on the weary two miles back, and when they turned to me as we reached the steps of the hotel and asked maliciously, "Well, are you pretty nearly done up?" I had voice and pluck left to gasp out, "Not at all, thank you." Then I toiled up to my own room and sat down and cried, and to this day I have not forgiven those men. They were not gentlemen. If they had been they would have had more consideration for a young girl—or for any one—than to submit her to a test that could not but be painful and mortifying.

So bear this in mind, you girls who are making up your minds as to whether you shall say "Yes" to the man who is urging you to marry him. Be sure that he has a part of his very nature the considerateness without which good manners are veneer and sure to crack and break.

PERSEVERANCE

A SWALLOW in the spring
Came to our granary, and 'neath the eaves
Essayed to make a nest, and then did bring Wet earth, and straw, and leaves.

Day after day she toiled
With patient heart; but ere her work was crowned
Some sad mishap the tiny fabric spoiled,
And dashed it to the ground.

She found the ruin wrought.
But not cast down, forth from the place she flew
And with her mate fresh earth and grasses brought
And built her nest anew.

But scarcely had she placed
The last soft feather in its ample door,
When wicked hand, or chance, again laid waste
And wrought the ruin o'er.

But still her heart she kept,
And toiled again; and last night, hearing call
I looked, and lo! three little swallows slept
Within the earth-made walls.

What truth is here, O man?
Hath hope been smitten in its early dawn,
Hath cloud o'ercast thy purpose, trust or plan?
Have faith, and struggle on.

LETTERS FROM THE WORKERS IN VARIOUS LOCALITIES

A Lively Letter From Wilmington.

I AM jealous of Massachusetts. It seems to me that half the girls in that State belong to Each and All. I wonder how that is? Surely the girls in the other States want to help, and be helped. Surely, Massachusetts is not the only wideawake State. Now, I hope this will not make you feel bad for Massachusetts, but possibly you will say something on our page to arouse the girls in the other States to the fact that Massachusetts is at the head of the march. But, note, I am not cross at one girl who is a member, because I have two very nice correspondents in Massachusetts.

Right here may I make a suggestion, please? The name I signed to my letter attracted the attention of one of my present Massachusetts friends, who wrote to know the meaning of the term. Of course, if any one will take the time and have the little patience, all such information can be found at any public library. Some girls may not have the time to spare, so do you not think such information might be put on our page—the nicknames of States and cities, why so called, and, if possible, who first gave the name? For instance, our State is called the "Diamond State," because it is so small, but various—always first in everything but Each and All. We are called the Blue Hen's Chickens, because a gentleman named Caldwell, living in Sussex county, of Delaware, who was a breeder of fine horses and game cocks, said good fighting cocks depended on the hen, and that the blue hen's eggs were the best, and this became a saying: Blue hen's cocks, or Caldwell's cocks. When Caldwell became an officer in the First Delaware Regiment he sent out squads of men, who were called "Caldwell's game cocks," afterward called "The Blue Hen's Chickens."

Do you think the girls want postals merely to get a number, or for their improvement? The Massachusetts girls I write to and exchange with send fine information, and I am trying to do the same. It is better than studying geography. You remember things better and learn things which the geography could not tell.
"THE BLUE HEN'S CHICK" (Wilmington, Del.).

This is a most interesting account of the origin of the name, and I wish the girls from the other States would write and tell the State nicknames and the explanations of these.

As to the Massachusetts girls being ahead—well, I would like to have the comments of girls from California, Pennsylvania and other States! What do you think of it?

For China Painters and Pyrographers.

Will you kindly tell the girls that I would like a few orders for a small panel of red and white clover, with a bee hovering over the blossoms? The panel, which is 14 by 7 inches, is painted in oils on canvas or Academy board, as preferred, and sent postpaid for $2. This makes a fine souvenir of the order and a beautiful little picture.

Please send me the names of one or two good china painters who do not live too far away—New England preferred. It is just possible I may be able to get them a few orders, if their work is good and prices moderate. I am especially anxious to find one, at least, who is willing to exchange work.

I would also like to hear of some one who does pyrography and who would exchange some of her work. If she would not care to exchange, I might be able to help her sell some work. PALETT (Portland, Me.).

Several china painters have written to me during the last few weeks, and the appearance of this letter may call forth more.

A Bethlehem Chapter.

Please mention on the page that I wish all the Bethlehem and South Bethlehem girls of Each and All would call and see me, or let me know by postal, as I would very much like to add some girls' names who are willing to work to our chapter list. The few now in the chapter enjoy the meetings very much, and I am sure others will be equally interested. As it is for every one, nobody will be barred at all.

I am writing to help any one all I can, as I am now a dressmaker. I am a graduate of a high school since 1905, and have had a chapter since September of that year. My sister will gladly help any one in the embroidery and fancy work line. We are also willing to receive any ideas or new instructions from any other person, through the mail or personally. I have kept house for my father over two years, and in some way may be able to be helpful to some needy member. If so, I shall be pleased to help cheerfully.
A. F. K. (South Bethlehem, Pa.).

Here, to my mind, is the foundation for a fine chapter in Bethlehem and South Bethlehem. We have a number of members there, and I hope we may have many more.

She Asks and Offers Help.

I am 15 years old. I have two brothers and one sister, all younger than myself. I have taken several lessons in music, and I am very much interested in drawing and painting—particularly oil painting. I am in the sophomore class of High School, and study French, English, plane geometry and ancient history. I am willing to help if there is any way in which I can.

I have some very good recipes for candy and a few for cooking. I could send some lace patterns which I have cut from papers to any that would like them. I would be very glad to accept help in painting or elocution, as I am interested in both, but I had no chance to learn either. "JOAN D'ARC (Mansfield, Mass.).

Plenty of desire to help and be helped here, and another chance for our lace-makers to get patterns.

Who Wants a Parents' Corner?

I think if the girls were to confide more in their fathers and mothers there would not be so many unhappy homes and marriages. I think it would be nice to give the fathers and mothers a corner, and call it "The Parents' Corner." EUNICE M. (Vancouver, B. C.).

Who else wishes a "Parents' Corner"? We certainly have parents enough to fill it.

A Tribute to Each and All.

When I joined Each and All a year and a half ago, I was very ill, nervous, despondent and weary, so I signed my letter "Weary," for I felt exactly that way; but since then I have changed wonderfully both in health and spirits. The letters I received from the girls were all so lovely and cheery, and enabled me to hear of the outside world, while I could not go out. I used to get such melancholy spells that I would often sit and cry, but since I have heard of others' troubles, and of so many dear ones afflicted so much worse than I, I resolved to help others around me if I could do. Now, I don't believe I ever get blue, but feel happy, and thank God for being no worse. I think the best way to be happy is to make others happy. I have attended two meetings of the Invalid Help Chapter, and met, oh, such lovely girls! They all prove to be so much better than I ever dreamed of. I send you a verse I like:

THE GREATER NEED.

With aching heart she searched the city's ends
For those who wanted help to bear their cross;
She did not know that home and nearest friends
Had greater need of her, and felt the loss.

F. L. A. F. (Philadelphia, Pa.).

This is a dear letter, and the tribute to Each and All fills my heart with joy. Many others could echo every word of the praise.

A Bunch of Good Ideas.

Have we an Amateur Writers' Chapter in Philadelphia? If not, let's have one—girls who are really in earnest about making writing their profession, and intend to be successful some day. "Birds of a feather flock together." I rather believe in, and I think we could help one another if we could get together to criticise and compare notes. There must be other girls in a big city like ours who, like myself, are beginning to be the least bit encouraged by a check now and then from an appreciative editor.

I have been interested in the letters about rearing children, for, while not a mother, I know even a very small child recognizes and respects good common sense in parents, and has far more affection for the mother who can judiciously punish when necessary, than for the overindulgent parent who worries herself sick if the child looks unhappy.

I know that my youngsters, if I am ever fortunate enough to embark in a state of matrimony, will be brought up with the idea that mother and father, by reason of their superiority in years, are the ones who know and while I would never expect to punish them, I think, if it were necessary, I could do so, and still run no danger of hurting their souls.

I am willing to help with whatever needs me most. Particularly, I am interested in the shut-in children—it takes such a trifle to make a child happy. I wish all the Each and All girls who know of little ones whose lives have not much brightness would send me their names. Even if the state of my pocketbook would not allow me to do much, I might talk, and induce some people who have more to part with some of their wealth.
HELEN S. C. (Philadelphia, Pa.).

A bunch of good ideas! Of course, I approve of the views on child-training, since they agree with my own! The suggestion for helping the shut-in children appeals to me strongly, and I think well of the chapter for writing girls. Who else approves? Who else wishes to join? Let me hear soon.

Where Are the Swedish Girls?

You ask me what I shall do for the club. Anything to help. If anybody wants instruction in Hardanger work or embroidery, I shall be glad to help. I can do beautiful shirtwaists in Hardanger, and all kinds of doilies and centrepieces. I am Swedish, and if the girls would like Swedish postcards, I shall write in English and translate every word about the card. I have not seen anything from the Swedish girls, and I know there are many right here in Boston. I would like you to give the girls my name and address, and I would like to have the State House of every city in the Union, if I could.
ELLEN B. (Somerville, Mass.).

We have a few Swedish girls in Each and All, and I hope we may have more when this letter appears.

The Rhododendron Chapter

I suppose you have heard before this through our secretary of the new chapter we have formed here in Asheville, beginning with six charter members. We meet every Monday afternoon at the different homes, and once a month we have an evening meeting, which is a social one. We hope to grow larger and be able to call our chapter is the Rhododendron Chapter. live up to our pledge in every respect. The name of our
G. C. (Asheville, N. C.).
President Rhododendron Chapter.

It pleases me to have these chapters springing up all over the country, in the small towns and in villages, as well as in the great cities. We cannot have too many of them, and this is the time of year when they do the best work, and bring in most members. What other girl will interest her friends and form a chapter of Each and All?

About the Honor Medal

You asked any girl who was free from the borrowing habit to write and receive an honor medal. I am not exactly free from borrowing, but the few times I have borrowed I have never neglected to return as soon as possible.
E. R. (Springfield, Mass.).

The Borrowing Habit Deplored

I am longing to give you the warm grasp of the hand in thanks for your talk to the girls on the evils of the borrowing habit. I was taught from a child never to borrow, and I know from experience that you must be out with the borrower. I want to thank you for the kind way you try to help the girls and to tell you that I never borrow.
A. H. (Phillipsdale, R. I.).

These two letters evidently belong together, and I am proud of the girls who can assert their abstinence from borrowing, even if the boast seems likely to put me to the expense of a medal!

Flower Seeds Wanted

I could send some mother paper patterns of boys' suits in popular styles, aged 4 and 8. I will pay postage to one address.

I will be glad to exchange a few morning glories or cosmos seeds for a few seeds of either larkspur, portulaca, marigold, wild columbine or bluebell.

I would be glad to exchange a postcard for a drawing of a simple design of flowers suitable to transfer and work in outline stitch. I have splendid recipes for tomato catsup, chili sauce, orange marmalade, spiced fruit and canned tomatoes.

I will be grateful if some housekeeper will tell me the secret of making baking powder biscuits "flaky."
Mrs. J. D. H. (Philadelphia).

Here is a woman who should belong to our Domestic Chapter. At this season of the year such recipes as she offers are eagerly sought, and all her offers of help will no doubt be eagerly accepted.

Who can give instruction about the flaky biscuit, or exchange the flower seeds?

To the Lace-Makers

Are there any members of EACH AND ALL who would like to exchange patterns of crocheted lace? If so, I would like to hear from them. I have a few patterns of lace, and would like very much to get some new ones.
L. L. D. (Burlington, N. J.).

We have lace-makers among us. Will not some of them exchange patterns with this member?

OBJECTS AND AIMS OF EACH AND ALL

PERHAPS some of you, seeing this page for the first time, wonder just what the Each and All Society really is; what there is about its aims and objects to create so widespread an interest among "young girls of all ages."

The society was founded in February, 1905, with Christine Terhune Herrick for its president, and with an almost instant membership of girls in nearly every State in the Union and in Canada.

Its object is to help girls help themselves by developing their talents into something the world wants; to solve difficult problems—the sort a girl wants a calm, unbiased, out-of-the-family opinion upon—and to promote the exchange of general help.

Any girl may belong. There is no red tape about it. The sending of your name for membership gives you the range of every opportunity the society boasts. And Mrs. Herrick stands ready to welcome, to advise and to help.

Little Dot (with a sympathetic look)—What a pity you grew up, Uncle Harry! Aren't you sorry?

Couldn't Picture It.

A teacher in a school asked her little girls to draw her a picture of what they would like to be when they grew up. The children set to work, and began to draw on their slates. But one little girl did not draw, but sat quietly biting her pencil in her hand, looking down at her slate.

The teacher noticed her puzzled expression, and asked her:

"Don't you know what you want to be when you grow up, Mary?"

The little girl looked up at this question.

"Oh, yes; I know quite well! I want to be married, like mother, but I don't know how to draw it."

Too Much Expense.

Little Dorothy was an only child and, as many another, her one wish was for a baby brother or sister. One day she had asked her papa to get one he had laughingly replied that it was too expensive and he could not afford it.

Long after this, Dorothy and her mother were taken by a friend for an automobile ride. The friend discoursed enthusiastically upon the pleasures of motoring, urging Dorothy's father to get an auto. Dorothy listened in silence for a while, then broke out excitedly with:

"Oh, Mr. L——, papa can't go to any expense till he buys me a new brother."—Exchange.

Jolly Games to

At our tiny folks the game of Taste is much fun.
Have the players sit in a row,
Tell them to open their mouths
Shut their eyes, place a particle of one sort or another in each mouth, and then ask each one to tell just from the taste what kind of food is in his mouth.

Rhymes is a jolly indoor

One player of the players stand outside the other circle, and while those who stay in the room think of one syllable (not too long a word). For instance, the word "cat."

Those who are outside are informed that the word has been thought of which begins with "cat."

The outsiders consult together, make a list of all the words they can think of that rhyme with "cat," and then come in and act out one of the words through here.

For instance, if the word "bat," for example, is decided upon, of course, and the actors are dismissed out of the room. Then they come back, and act out another of the words they have thought of, as, for instance, they may say. To act this they would rapidly about the room on hands and knees. They are hissed out again, of course.

Then they finally think of the right word and coming in fall dat on the floor. This time hearty clapping by the insiders assures them that they have guessed correctly.

Then the two sides change places and the game goes on as before.

This game is called "Bingo." Perhaps you know the jolly college song of the same name. Use the following verses to sing the game:

There was a miller's dog lay at the mill,
And B-I-N-G-O was the name was little Bingo;
And B-I-N-G-O was the name was little Bingo;
And B-I-N-G-O was the name was little Bingo.

Then I, I with an N, N with a G,
And an O,
And the name was little Bingo.

THE Great Western Tri-Combination Circus ends its season's tour, and its owners, Mr. Gerald Stanley de Halibut, Mr. Timothy Guy Meerschaum and the Wise Clown, decide, instead of going into winter quarters, to divide up the animals—twelve in number—in the proportion of their ownership shares, Mr. Gerald Stanley de Halibut's being one-half, Mr. Timothy Guy Meerschaum's one-quarter and the Wise Clown's one-sixth. Unfortunately, one of the animals dies, leaving eleven animals.

"Now, how on earth can I get my one-half share?" asks Mr. Gerald Stanley de Halibut, and "How can I get my one-quarter?" asks Mr. Timothy Guy Meerschaum. "And I——" begins the Wise Clown. "Ah! I have it! I'll borrow me friend, the Jocky Boy's, zebra. After that, it's easy." (Look at the pictures and read the captions.)

But one little girl did not draw, but sat quietly holding her pencil in her hand, looking blankly at her slate.

Uncle Jack's Treat

"OH, NURSIE, do fasten my frock!" cried Doris imploringly.

"No, No!" chimed in Mona. "She's promised to do my hair first, hasn't you, nursie?"

"And I've been waiting for ages to be washed!" grumbled Sadie. "I know Uncle Jack will be here before I'm ready!"

"If you don't all stop bothering me this very minute, I'll get none of you ready!" came in exasperated tones from nurse; and thus reduced to order, the trio curbed their impatience as much as possible, until at last all three stood with sashes tied, hair brushed and faces glowing with excitement—and soap, ready to go downstairs the minute mother should send for them.

Jane's appearance at the door was the signal for a rush for the stairs, and bursting into the drawing room, with a joyful chorus of "Uncle Jack!" the three little girls, utterly regardless of their clean muslin pinafores, threw themselves upon him and nearly strangled him with hugs.

"Well, darlings!" cried Uncle Jack cheerily, when at last he could get breath to speak. "So you're glad to see me, eh? And what sort of a treat do you think I've planned for you?"

"Oh, do tell us!" they cried excitedly.

"What do you say to the matinee this afternoon?"

"Oh, how lovely!" gasped the wholly delighted trio.

"Yes," said mother, "aren't you lucky chicks? Now run away and ask nurse to get you ready."

Five minutes later three chattering, laughing little scarlet-coated girls squeezed into a hansom with Uncle Jack, and gayly waving their handkerchiefs to mother, were driven off to the matinee.

Oh, what a perfect dream of wonder and delight that matinee was, to be sure! How they laughed and clapped their hands at everything, bobbing up and down in their seats like so many little Jacks-in-the-box!

MONA DISAPPEARS

When at last it was all over, and they had stood on their seats to see the very last of the play after the people began to rise, Uncle Jack piloted them to the entrance, and leaving them in the vestibule near the door, told them to wait there while he went to get a hansom; for it was raining fast, and as the cabs drove up they were captured by the waiting crowd.

"I see Uncle Jack!" cried Mona, after a minute. "Look—over there!" And before the others could stop her, she had run outside and disappeared in the crowd.

"I don't believe it was Uncle Jack," said Sadie doubtfully.

"Why, here he is!" exclaimed Doris, as Uncle Jack came hurrying back to fetch them.

"Hasn't you seen Mona?" cried the girls.

"Mona!" exclaimed Uncle Jack. "Why, isn't she here?"

"No; she ran out a few minutes ago, 'cause she said she saw you."

"Great heavens!" ejaculated their uncle.

Nearly half an hour passed before he returned, looking very pale and worried.

"She's nowhere to be seen," he said. "I'll take you two home, or your mother will be getting anxious; and then I'll go off to the police station."

What a different little party it was on the homeward journey to the merry quartette that had driven out earlier in the afternoon.

Uncle Jack hardly spoke a word; while Sadie and Doris sat either side of him, holding his hands, and wondering with anxious little hearts what had become of Mona.

To think of her being all alone in the dark, wet streets—lost in the great city!

It was awful! The thought of it completely blotted out all the fun of the afternoon, and made them wish they had never come.

UNCLE JACK SURPRISED

"I'll get out first, and tell your mother what has happened," said Uncle Jack, as the cab stopped opposite their house.

Barely were the words spoken, however, when the front door opened, and almost tumbling down the steps in her hurry rushed Mona.

"Safe! Thank heaven!" ejaculated Uncle Jack, as he held her in his arms.

"Mona, where did you get to?" gasped her sisters, as they scrambled out of the cab.

"So you've found your naughty truant," said mother to Uncle Jack. "But isn't it a mercy that Mrs. Jackson, from next door, happened to see the child wandering about alone in the crowd!"

"You see," explained Mona, as she sat on Uncle Jack's knee, "when I got outside I found that the person I thought was you wasn't you; so then I tried to get back to where the others were, but got lost in the crowd; and, oh! I was so frightened, till after a long time Mrs. Jackson saw me, and she brought me home."

"All's well that ends well," said Uncle Jack thankfully; "but I think that next time I take you out we'll all come home together."

To which no one agreed more heartily than a certain little girl called —Hope Ward.

"The miller he bought a cask of ale,

One player represents a miller, the other players stand around him in a circle, and all dance around and sing the verses.

When it comes to the spelling part of the rhymes, the miller points to a certain child for each letter, and that child must promptly sing out the correct letter.

Any player caught making a mistake must pay a forfeit.

By what we have mastered of good or gain;
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet.

BRUNO, THE BLACK BEAR

EVERYBODY has heard of Romulus and Remus and the old gray wolf that suckled them, and almost everybody has heard of Mowgli, who was brought up out of the kindness of her heart and because of her curiosity concerning man by the Mother Wolf, in the same cave with her family of little wolves.

But sometimes the order is reversed. Sometimes it is an animal baby that is nursed and tended and "raised" by a human mother along with her human baby.

That was what happened in the "Strange Tale of the North Woods," which Professor William L. Underwood, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, told recently to an audience of children for the benefit of the New York Babies' Hospital. There was a big audience of little folk present, who broke out into all sorts of shrill laughs and chirrups at the most unexpected places, especially when the screen showed Bruno investigating a toad or helping a little girl play with her doll, or having his milky mouth wiped.

Bruno, says the New York Tribune, was the little black bear baby that got adopted. Ursula was the 9-month-old human baby whose mother did the adopting. She had five children of her own, all under 5 years, and two of them adopted, but when a lumberman brought in the tiny blind thing, shrinking and shivering, no bigger than a gray squirrel and weighing only half a pound, her mother's heart warmed to it.

"It's got to die if I don't take it," she said to herself. Then to the lumberman, "Give it to me."

A NAME FOR BABY

Her own baby was a fat, crowing youngster of 9 months at the time, and she was bringing her up on pork and beans by way of making her hardy for the life that was before her. So she threw the human toddler and the four-legged toddler in together and brought them both up.

Professor Underwood had heard rumors of the queer arrangements. He longed to see the bear with his own eyes and buy it. When he heard the bear had been sold he was in despair. When, later, he heard it had not been sold he took the midnight train for the North Woods, hired a pony and started on a twenty-mile ride over two feet of snow to the lumber camp where Bruno's foster mother's husband was cook.

"What do you ask for your bear?" he asked the lumberman's wife.

She replied in good down-East fashion with another question: "What do you suppose I ask for my baby?"

"I'm not in the market for babies," said he, "and I don't know what the latest quotation is in babies."

"Well," said she, "I'd as soon sell you my baby as my bear—so there! But what I do want you to do is to think up a nice name for my baby girl—a name that'll have 'bear' in it somehow. Will you?

"We've scratched the hair off our heads trying to think of one," put in the lumberman.

Professor Underwood said he would, and all the way back to Boston he kept saying over to himself:

"Bear—bear—what would be a suitable name for a little girl who was brought up with a bear?"

At last it came to him—"Ursula." It was a good name, with a history and tradition behind it, and meant just what it ought to mean to fill the bill—"a little she-bear." So he sent the name back into the heart of the North Woods, and with it a souvenir spoon with a little bear perched on the top of the handle.

"And they named the baby Ursula," he told his little hearers. "But they tucked in Underwood between that and her surname—and they call her Lala."

From weighing only half a pound Bruno had now grown to be a woolly chocolate brown bear of twenty pounds or so, very fond of jam and very fond of his foster sister. Soon he was so big and strong that his human mother wrote Professor Underwood she was afraid she would have to part with him. The day the Boston professor drove through the delicate veil-like green of the June forest to the lumber camp with a wooden box on the tailboard of the wagon to carry away Bruno, was a day of mourning in the lumberman's family. The lumberman had a lump in his throat so big you could see it. All the children were crying and the poor human mother when she caught sight of the wooden box, threw her apron over her head and broke down completely. Underwood felt like a murderer.

GOOD-BYE TO BRUNO

"Bruno hadn't been two days at my summer camp," went on the lecturer, "before he had ripped off every mosquito bar in the house. To make up for it he killed every fly. He would stand upon his hind legs and slap with his paw at every fly he saw. Each slap was some fly's death blow. We tried to wean him on cow's milk, but he got the stomach ache and swelled up till he was as broad as he was long and cried and bit his paws, and finally we had to return to condensed milk and water. At the end of the summer we brought him back with us to my house at Belmont, where he and the cook became great chums. For 50 cents I bought him a fox terrier for a playmate, and the two were inseparable." But Bruno was now growing at the rate of two pounds a week, weighed seventy pounds, and was nearly as tall as the professor.

"What is going to become of the bear?" people would ask.

But others put it, "What is going to become of Underwood?" (They thought he would be the one to go first.) So when he was two years old reluctantly they parted with him to a friend with a big cage.

Some Good Tricks

H'M! SEVER a string in two inside a corked bottle! That isn't possible"—Is that what you would say if any one proposed to do such a stunt?

Well, let's see about that. Get an empty bottle, a white one if you can. Take out the cork and in the lower end fix a pin, then attach to this pin a short length of lightweight twine which is slightly weighted at the lower end. (The weight serves to keep the string straight and vertical.) Now press the cork firmly into the neck of the bottle with the weighted string inside.

"Now how are you to sever that string in two without placing your hand inside the bottle?

This is the way to do it: Get a powerful burning glass and hold it in such a position that the sun's rays will concentrate themselves on a point be-

In a very few minutes the burning rays will sever the string at that point, and the weight, together with a portion of the string, will drop to the bottom of the bottle!"

Another trick is this: Make a cardboard band like the one shown in the picture, balance it perfectly on top of the open mouth of a bottle, and on the topmost point of the band, directly

The trick is to get the coin to drop plump into the bottle. It can be done by your giving the inside surface of the cardboard a sharp, quick rap with your index finger.

This will cause it to leap up, and when done just right will cause the coin to drop neatly inside the bottle.

A Fortunate Find

MR. HOLMAN HUNT, the painter of "The Light of the World" and other famous religious pictures, writing of his early struggles, tells of the chance discovery of a coin of the realm at a time when he was actually penniless.

"That discovery," he says, "was made under somewhat peculiar circumstances. I had just come to the end of the money which I had earned by copying for Mr. Dyce his picture, 'Jacob and Rachel,' and was one evening wondering how I could raise the amount needed to purchase a stamp for a letter which I had just written.

"Throwing myself back in my armchair, I thrust my hands deep down between the seat and the back. Why I did so I cannot tell, but it must have been by some happy inspiration, for my fingers came in contact with a circular disc of some thickness, which, when I pulled it forth, turned out to be half a crown."

Can You Tell?

Many centuries ago, in Florence, the very first men who made a business of lending money were members of the great Medici family, whose coat-of-arms consisted of three gilt balls. When other men took up the same sort of business, they adopted the Medici arms also, and so the custom has continued to the present day.

The Bible inscription on the Liberty Bell is "Proclaim liberty throughout the land and unto all the inhabitants thereof."

Mottoes of Great Men

HERE are the mottoes of some of the world's great men:

"One thing at a time, and that done well," was a guiding rule of Gladstone's.

"What has been done can be done again," Lord Beaconsfield believed and practiced.

"Hitch your wagon to a star," inspired Emerson, as, in turn, it has inspired and encouraged many others.

"Be cautious, but bold," the great Rothschild claimed as his chosen business maxim.

Charles Kingsley used to say: "When I am engaged on any piece of work I go at it as if, for the time being, there was nothing else in the world worth doing."

The motto of Robert Louis Stevenson was, "To be honest, to be kind, to be cheerful, to earn a little and spend a little less."

But, perhaps, the best motto ever adopted by any great man was Joan Wesley's: "The best of all is, God is with us."

Count and Countess de Caserta, claiming Throne of the Two Sicilies."

THERE are in exile today more Kings and Queens—at least, persons who claim the purple as their right—than at any other recent period of the world's history.

During the last half century more thrones have gone begging than was ever known before.

It is not uncommon to see upon the streets of Paris or at some of the famous resorts of Europe men and women upon whose brows once rested crowns, or those whose hands would now hold sceptres were their claims to sovereignty allowed.

Some have long since given up in despair all idea of recognition, others are still buoyed by the hope that a kindlier future may bring them to their own.

Methought I saw the footprints of a throne.—Wordsworth.

Here I and sorrows sit; here is my throne.—Shakespeare.

FOR years the most pathetic figure in all Europe has been the former Empress of the French, the ill-fated Eugenie.

She who was once the most brilliant, beautiful and flattered of all sovereign consorts, whose gay court was the Mecca of the fashionable world, and whose smile of approval was more highly prized than wealth, has spent the declining years of her eventful life in sadness and solitude; she has long been tottering in the valley of the shadow. For her, indeed,

A sorrow's crown of sorrow
Is remembering happier things.

Hurled from her throne by a thunderbolt of fate, as sudden as it was direful; hurried into exile, then soon to lose both husband and son, the clouds, when they came, came thickly.

At her modest country home in the south of England this unhappy woman, called the loneliest in all Europe, has quietly sat for years awaiting a welcome release from the chains of life.

Her only pleasures—most pathetic ones—have been in tending the last resting places of Napoleon III and the young Prince Imperial; in guarding a few sacred relics of the past and of those she loved best, and an occasional visit to Paris, where she might gaze upon the scenes of her former splendor, but more particularly upon the garden of the Tuileries, "where," she would say, with a wan smile, "my son used to play."

Quite as hopeless, perhaps, from a political viewpoint, is the position of Prince Victor Napoleon, who claims the Bonapartist succession, and is styled Napoleon IV by his followers.

Prince Victor, however, has not retired from the world nor permitted himself to be surrounded by an atmosphere of gloom and despair. He manages to enjoy life fairly well, even though he considers it prudent to remain outside the borders of his beloved France.

Being a cousin of the King of Italy, he is always welcome at that court; in fact, Victor Emmanuel is said to be rather fond of him. His brother, Prince Louis Napoleon, is one of the most popular and highly favored generals in the Russian army.

KEEPS HIMSELF IN THE LIMELIGHT

Prince Victor is a familiar figure on the boulevards of Brussels, where he resides, as well as on the streets of Rome. He is of medium height, slightly bald and inclined to embonpoint, a fact that does not displease him, since it was a physical characteristic of the first Napoleon.

Victor is determined that the world shall not forget his claims to the imperial throne of France.

He has written a book upon his great-uncle's career, and at times sends to his partisans throughout France signed photographs of himself.

France is also responsible for the throneless latter years of two other derelicts of royalty—Ranavalona, formerly Queen of Madagascar, and Behazin, one-time King of Dahomey and general of its famous army of Amazons.

Since 1897 Ranavalona, who was rudely torn by invading troops from her palace overlooking the Indian Ocean, has been virtually a prisoner, although she is allowed a house in Algiers, and is permitted to visit Paris.

Back in 1885, when the nations of Europe were reaching out for more colonial possessions, Queen Ranavalona III, then a woman of 28 years, was quietly ruling over her beloved Madagascar.

France and England came to an agreement under which the latter was to establish a protectorate over Zanzibar and the former one over Madagascar.

It so happened that the people of Zanzibar made no objection to the arrangement; but the Horas of Madagascar did object, and most decidedly.

It took France five years to get these people in a proper frame of mind, through severe and repeated campaigns, to welcome the blessings of European rule.

At first the brown-eyed little Queen was not disturbed, but, later, upon the breaking out of a fresh insurrection, France promptly annexed the island, declared the throne vacant and dragged the Queen off into cantivity.

Since then she has been a state prisoner of the French, compelled to reside most of the time at Algiers, where she receives an allowance of $6000 from the Colonial Office.

For several years the former Queen has petitioned the French Government repeatedly to increase her pension. She asserts that from her allowance she must care for family dependents, pay the school bills of her niece and buy clothing commensurate with her position, and that she cannot do all this on $6000 a year.

Her dearest wish is to be permitted to pass her remaining years in her beloved Madagascar, but this is denied. She has petitioned to be allowed to take up her residence in the United States, but again the French Government has answered "No."

Another exiled Queen, however, is permitted to spend her days of official eclipse under the Stars and Stripes—Liliuokalani, of Hawaii.

Since she was deposed by her people in 1893 she has spent much time in Washington, seeking a large money grant from Congress, and has also made a tour of a considerable portion of the world.

Owning several residences in the vicinity of Hawaii, she remains quietly in one or the other of them during much of the year.

"I am feeling very happy, and have forgotten all about my former claims to the throne of Hawaii," she said recently.

"Although I forfeited $20,000,000 when I was dethroned, and am living now on a private fortune that remained to me, it is enough, and I manage to enjoy life."

It was a terrible shock to Behazin when he lost the throne of his turbulent kingdom of Dahomey. It happened to comprise a part of Africa that the French looked upon with covetous eyes, however, and the King's pleasant little habit of making war indiscriminately upon all about him gave them a pretext for seizing and subduing his domain.

He headed an army of 15,000 warriors, who loved fighting far better than any of the pursuits of peace. A large portion of this army was composed of the famous Amazons, those fierce women whose bloodthirstiness in battle exceeded that of the men.

But Behazin was deposed and sent to the far-away island of Martinique a prisoner. As the climate there did not agree with him, he was recently permitted to live in Algiers.

In his exile the former King is accompanied by his half dozen wives. Although they too, were at one time Amazons in the field, they now seem quite subdued, and whenever their lord and master is permitted to make a journey they carry his numerous pieces of baggage on their backs like packhorses.

Living quietly with his large family, dividing their time between Nice and Caserta are the Count and Countess Caserta, claimants to the defunct throne of Naples and the Two Sicilies.

At one time this kingdom embraced Sicily and Southern Italy, which were incorporated into the new Kingdom of Italy in 1860-61. The last King of the Two Sicilies was Francis II, who died in exile, leaving his family in debt and his jewels pawned.

MAGNIFICENT JEWEL CARVING

One of the crown treasures of the kingdom was the most remarkable topaz in the world, a magnificent Brazilian stone, weighing nearly four pounds.

In the early part of the last century this stone was turned over to Professor Andrea Cariello, who was to carve upon it a representation of the Last Supper.

He devoted nearly ten years to the work and spent over $20,000 for diamonds, diamond powder and other material needed. When the reigning house of the period met misfortune and was unable to pay the charges, the carver remained in possession of the carver's fancy.

A few years ago Count Caserta began an endeavor to raise money to redeem the gem and present it to the Pope. The work of Professor Cariello is said to be the finest and most exquisite piece of precious stone engraving that has been done in modern times.

Among the royal exiles of Europe is former Queen Natalie, of Servia, mother of the murdered King Alexander. After her divorce from King Milan she took up her residence in Paris, where she spends her days in semi-retirement.

The Duc d'Orleans is also a Pretender to the French throne, being the grandson of Louis Philippe, last King of that country. He married an Austrian princess, has immense wealth and divides his time between England and Austria.

With such a fashion of being "Pretenders" set by aspirants to important thrones, it is not remarkable that there are claimants to a number of the more insignificant principalities of Europe. And there are some of these who pocket sovereignties the thrones of which will eventually go begging for an occupant when they become vacant.

PER ASPERA AD ASTRA.

"Her bars to the stars." The deep cañons at the mountain's base turned away from the sun lie in perpetual shadow. Only by climbing which racks the soul and makes the heart throb fast can human eyes reach the height where gleams perpetual light. The combination of troubles in Cuba leading to our intervention and the Spanish War, followed by the establishing practically of an American protectorate over Cuba and the absolute possession of Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, then our growing interests with Mexico, and finally our undertaking to dig the Panama Canal, have brought us almost daily news illustrated by scenes of tropical landscape and tropical life. As we read "Locksley Hall" and the "Lotos-Eaters" we realize much more clearly what is represented in the wonderful word-pictures of Tennyson. We can see the scene where "Hangs the heavy-blossomed bower, hangs the heavy-fruited tree, Summer isles of Eden lying in dark-purple spheres of sea."

But in California we had long before learned the meaning of the skies where there are

"Rosy constellations burning, mellow moons and jewelled skies, Nuts of tropic shade and palms in clusters, knots of Paradise."

We know something about the inhabitants of perfect physical development with an agility to "Climb the wild goat by the hair and hurl their lances in the sun."

We almost hear them

"Whoop, and hark the parrot's call"

And see

"Flame
Like the rainbows of the brooks."

We shut our eyes and see

"Island and the yellow down bordered with palm"

And people who, as in "The Lotos-Eaters," "Seem'd as they bore of that enchanted stem laden Both with flower and fruit."

We almost lulled to sleep as we read and

"With half-shut eyes ever to seem Falling asleep in a half-dream!
To dream and dream, like yonder amber light."

Half way around the globe we come to a country the very antithesis of this. The first historical record of the land is found in Caesar, the Roman conqueror, accustomed to the myriad-smiling expanse of his own Mediterranean. His description of these waters is like molten lead, as cold as unmelted ice. He tells us of the low-lying plains of the Netherlands, cut leagues inward by lakes that were almost seas, and torn hither and thither by the immense flow of great rivers coming in from central Europe. The forests of pine and oak and ash and the tangled underbrush which encumbered this low country everywhere not overspread by water, was so dense as to be impenetrable, excepting that if one reached the tree-tops he might travel for miles from the branch of one tree to that of the next. The only harvest the people gathered was amid the dangerous billows of this tumultuous and almost icy sea, or from the jungles of these impenetrable forests. These Hollanders well might have said

"We have had enough of action, and of motion we,
Rolled to starboard, rolled to larboard, when the surge was seething free.
Clanging fights, and flaming towns, and sinking ships, and praying hands."

One might well expect that the inhabitants of these tropical islands would have made great progress in every way and have built up a civilization of the highest type in the world. One might well expect to find this inhospitable flat along the North Sea standing today as it stood 2000 years ago, with its great inland seas, overflowing rivers, impenetrable forests and tangled undergrowth. As a matter of fact, the Philippines are today but little advanced in condition over what they were when the first European foot touched their soil. The Holland of Caesar's days has for centuries been converted into one of the most fertile and progressive countries in Europe. All Holland is like a besieged town. The army which invests it is the waves of the stormy North Atlantic. The inhabitants have built ramparts against the ceaseless activity of this foe, reaching from one end of the land to the other. They have hewn out granite rock from Norwegian and German mountains and have carried this rock hundreds of miles, building up ramparts leagues long to defy their insatiable and incessant enemy. The waves that have broken through their dykes have been pumped back again into the sea. Broad stretches of country have been rescued from the waves and made as fertile as any on the globe. In spots from 10,000 to 75,000 acres of land have been reclaimed from the sea. At other times the waves have reconquered this reclaimed land, but the resolute Dutch have won back from their enemy as much and more in some other portion of the country. They have actually pumped out whole seas. There are dikes 800 miles long.

The struggles of this brave people against the Spanish invaders were as resolute and as trying as their struggle against the North Sea. It was as victorious, too. The annals of Holland are full of names like the Tromps, Ruyter, Philip Van Artewald and Van Dyke. Its towns are famous in science as well as in history, and in art as in other respects. There is no Leyden in the Philippine Islands. There is no Utrecht in Porto Rico. The most salubrious and fertile islands have no great marts of commerce like Amsterdam, Rotterdam and The Hague. The difference in the manhood of the Dutch and that of the Moros is a direct result of the soil and climate. It has been the everlasting struggle against the hostile waves of the North Atlantic, against the inhospitable climate of their country, against the floods of the great rivers and against the ambitious designs of the Spaniards and other enemies of Holland that has developed the stalwart, stubborn determination of the race.

The bleak fields of New England produced a crop of wheat with difficulty and scant at the best. But where the Puritans found a barren rock too sterile to produce a single blade of grass they planted a little red schoolhouse, and there there was no difficulty encountered in raising men. New England is not so fertile as the Gem of the Antilles nor as the alluvial plains of the Philippine archipelago. But neither Cuba nor Mindanao has produced any Lodges, Sumners, Fessendens, Dingleys or Websters. Manila has no Boston Latin School, Exeter nor Andover, no university like Brown, Yale or Harvard. New England's barren rocks, like Holland's wave-invested plains, have produced a higher type of manhood than the most luxuriant tropical bowers.

A CYCLE OF SONNETS.

XVII—EVENING.

It is a beauteous evening, calm and free;
The holy time is quiet as a nun
Breathless with adoration; the broad sun
Is sinking down in its tranquility;
The gentleness of heaven is on the sea:
Listen! the mighty being is awake,
And doth with his eternal motion make
A sound like thunder everlastingly.
Dear child! dear girl! that walkest with me here,
If thou appear'st untouched by solemn thought,
Thy nature therefore is not less divine:
Thou liest "in Abraham's bosom" all the year;
And worshipp'st at the temple's inner shrine,
God being with thee when we know it not.

—[William Wordsworth.

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

THE BEAUTIFUL AND THE GOOD.

PLATO long ago identified Ethics and Esthetics, by permitting no distinction to be made between the Beautiful and the Good. Unless the beautiful has a moral purpose or ethical end, it is not good; and not good, it cannot be beautiful. Thus goodness, beauty and truth were finally to be considered not as independent properties or attributes, but simply as three different aspects of one fundamental ethical principle.

The controversy has been a long and arduous one over the question whether all beauty had not finally to be determined by the element of moral value which it contained. Thus artists and critics have been at war, some contending that "art existed for art's sake," others maintaining that art without some immediate or remote moral purpose had no right to exist.

Notwithstanding the prominence which such mooted questions receive in academic discussions and in professional circles, and albeit the attention that is drawn to the argument by the public press, the general public as a rule fail to perceive the vital importance of the influence exerted by our esthetical conceptions upon our ethical nature. Hence, when those in authoritative positions off-handedly declare beauty to be "a thing apart," having no relation to the good, when they resent the idea that the pursuit of the beautiful should involve a moral motive, and when they further deny, in speech or conduct, that art and artist, as agency and agent, ought to operate in the interests of society by subserving ethical ideals—then, whether consciously or unconsciously, they are exposing the community to a subtle source of danger. It is enough, say they who live for art alone, that the picture, the poem, the statue or architectural structure, delights the beholder! Its sufficient reason for being is the beauty of a work of art; and we know an object to be beautiful, whether the work of nature or of art, because it arouses within us certain sensations of pleasure—it stirs us with agreeable emotions!

With such a justification of beauty or art for "its own sake," what think you is the psychological state of the savage who, with triumphant thrills of happiness, scalps his unfortunate victim! Is he not "delighted" with the view before him? Does he not thoroughly "enjoy" the result of his capture or his physical prowess? If "enjoyment" be the sole criterion of art or beauty, and the one object of the artist, if no degree of ethical judgment is necessary to determine the ultimate value of a work of art, and no ethical principle to guide the artist, then what wonder that the noblest art and the greatest artists are often so shamelessly prostituted to the increasingly urgent demands of vile sensuality?

Plato went so far as to decry the art of poetry because the devotees of the Muse employed all their rhetorical skill and the literary blandishments placed at their disposal by a vividly iridescent imagination, not as he thought for the purpose of praising the virtues of heroes, statesmen and scholars, but to present in a form so attractive the vices and weaknesses of civil and political leaders as to cause the demoralization of the state.

The Greek philosopher recognized the poets' efforts as eminently artistic—aye, so much so that their consummate art tended to reduce the moral standards of the republic. Men were so fascinated by the beauty with which moral ugliness was portrayed that they were seized by the desire to become similarly immortalized.

Such was the "art for art's sake' which Plato justly condemned, because the lesson it conveyed was bad; the examples placed before men for their contemplation and emulation did not inspire acts of grandeur and sublimity, they did not touch the majestic heights of character, but made their appeal to the lower passions of pompous pride and destructive vanity.

No, it does not seem to the rational moral nature that anything truly beautiful should be other than good—good in its essence; that is to say, there can be nothing essentially harmful in its nature or influence.

The reason, finally, why so many "pure artists" are the most revoltingly impure men is not to be sought in the fact that they possess the "artistic temperament," but in the circumstance that the artistic temperament possesses them! Extremely susceptible to impressions of sense, they yield to the Siren of Sensuousness until they are at last under complete control of the Demon of Sensation. Hence, they abandon themselves to the whirlpool of esthetic and other emotions without ever a thought of the tempering and proportioning power of moral resistance, the true armament of the soul. Thus, while themselves worshipers of symmetry, proportion, grace, regularity and all the enumerable properties of beauty—by their mad disregard of the interdependence of the intrinsically beautiful and the good—the artists' nature is recklessly perverted, until at last it looms large as a moral monstrosity.

It is fatal, fatal to the individual in particular, and to society at large, to hold that the Good and the Beautiful are two totally different and unrelated aspects of life; and moreover, that the consequence of the effect of one upon the other is immaterial. The arbitrary divorce of ethics from esthetics has proved a pitfall to both individuals and nations, and men, women and entire peoples will continue to go under in the same way, so long as they erroneously believe that Beauty can stand alone without the Good, and that Art will prosper or fulfill its highest functions, without forming a close association with Morality.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ORAN (Western Algeria.)—I have left Morocco and am now traveling in African France. I landed at Oran three weeks ago, and have already made my way through the rich lands of the Tell, across the high plateaus which are upheld between the ranges of the Atlas Mountains and down into the Desert of Sahara. I am now back in Oran, the chief seaport of Western Algeria, and am about to start on a 260-mile railroad journey eastward to Algiers, the capital.

Before I begin describing my travels, I want to tell you what the French have in Africa. Their possessions include more than one-third of the continent, a territory several hundred thousand miles larger than the whole United States together with Alaska and our outlying colonies. Practically the whole of the Sahara west of the Libyan Desert belongs to them, and that alone is half as big as the United States proper. They have an enormous district south of the Sahara which is known as French Central Africa, and several colonies along the Gulf of Guinea. The French Congo, which is north of the Belgian Congo, runs northward so as to take in a part of Lake Chad, and covers, all told, an area ten times as large as the State of Illinois. It is inhabited by 15,000,000 people, the most of whom are jet-black negroes of the most debased types.

The richest of the French possessions, however, are along the south coast of the Mediterranean Sea, comprising the two great States of Algeria and Tunisia. Of these Tunisia is a protectorate. It is almost absolutely governed by the French, and they are rapidly developing it. Algeria, on the other hand, is now a part of the French republic. It is a French state; it holds its own elections and it has three senators and six deputies in the Parliament at Paris. Its Governor-General is a Frenchman, and most of its officials are natives of the French republic.

The Best French Colony.

Indeed, Algeria is by far the best piece of property France has outside her own boundaries. It her great winter garden, which furnishes the chief vegetables for all the French cities and the granary which supplies a large part of her flour. Fast steamers carry the garden stuff across the Mediterranean in a day, and in thirty-six hours it is for sale in the Halles Centrales, in Paris. Some of the best wines used in France are made in this country, and Algeria gives France imports to the amount of sixty-odd million dollars a year. France, herself, annually sends $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 worth of her wares to Algeria, and the trade between the two countries steadily grows.

Many look upon Algeria as a little strip of mountain and desert. The truth is, that part of it lying along the Mediterranean and running back up the foothills of the Atlas has some of the richest soil upon earth. It is only from thirty to 100 miles long, including a territory about as large as New York and Massachusetts combined. It has more good land by far than both of those States. This land is known as the Tell. It runs clear across Algeria and on into Tunisia. It has been for centuries the granary of this part of the world. The Phoenecians and Carthaginians built empires upon it, and it was for a long time one of the principal bread baskets of imperial Rome. It was fought for by the Vandals, the Greeks, and in the eighth century was conquered by the Arabs, who made the country Mohammedan, as it is today.

A Birdseye View of Algeria.

Algeria consists of these rich lands of the Tell, of the high plateaus of the Atlas just below them, and of the foothills running down to the Sahara. The country is just about as long from east to west as from Philadelphia to Cleveland, and as wide as from Washington to Boston by way of New York. It contains altogether as much land as all New England added to New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Louisiana.

It is divided into three provinces, each beginning at the Mediterranean and cutting across to the Sahara. The largest of these is at the east and is known as Constantine. It is almost as big as Minnesota, and it has several hundred thousand more people. The next is Algiers, which is not far from the size of Missouri, with a population of 1,600,000, and the other is the western province of Oran, where I am writing. Oran is just about the size of Pennsylvania, and its population is more than 1,000,000.

The total population of the whole country now approximates 5,000,000, and of these almost 400,000 are French. There are also several hundred thousand other Europeans, made up of Spaniards, Italians, Maltese and Jews. The rest of the Algerians are Mohammedan Africans, and three out of every five of them is an Arab. There are also about 700,000 white Africans known as Kabyles and about 53,000 Jews.

Here in Oran there are a large number of Spaniards and many negroes who were originally brought across the Sahara as slaves and sold in the market of Algiers. In some of the Algerian oases the people are about all negroes, and I see many here in the town. The negro women often act as shampooers in the Moorish bathhouses, and many of the men are beggars who dance about, singing weird songs to the clashing of queer iron cymbals. One such followed my carriage today and I made a photograph of him. His dance was a sort of a Nautch dance, consisting of a continuous contortion of the hips and a twisting of the waist.

The Port of Oran.

But let me give you a picture of this town of Oran. It is the chief seaport of Western Algeria, and is the second city of the whole country in size. It contains about 100,000 people, and it is more French than Algiers. It is situated not far from the borders of Morocco, almost directly south of Cartagena in Spain. The Rock of Gibraltar is about as far away as the distance from New York and Boston, and it takes about two days to go by ship from here to Marseilles. The port has a fine harbor, consisting of a beautiful bay with a high mountain looking down upon it. East of the mountain there is a gulley or cañon with low hills extending to the eastward, and in and on the sides of this is the city of Oran. There is some flat ground for the wharves, back of them the buildings of the city climb the hills in three great terraces, giving every house an outlook on the Mediterranean Sea.

Down near the port are great warehouses filled with alfa grass, bags of wheat and oats, great hogsheads of wine and other stuff ready for export. The wharves are piled high with such wares; and immense drays carrying four or five tons, are hauled up and down the hills by mules. I have seen here seven huge hogsheads of wine on one dray drawn by four mules hitched tandem, and other drays carrying loads that would be impossibility in the United States. All traffic is upon two wheels, and that from the load of five tons to a cart with a bed twenty feet long to a load of the little store boxes on wheels hauled by dogs much larger than Newfoundland dogs.

The Algerian mule has an odd harness. The mule ends in three horns; two of them are as long as horns and extend out from the shoulders, while the third is just over the neck and is shaped like the horn of a rhinoceros. The latter stands straight up above the head of the mule, and is usually about two feet high. These horns are hung with bells, which jingle as the animals go. I observe that the mules have leather pockets tied back of these horns. They may be for leather or rain. Some of the better animals have their hair clipped from their backs and sides. Many wear shoes which extend out about half an inch beyond the hoof all around. The shoes of the donkeys are made at right angle with no opening at the back, as is the case with our horseshoes.

In Algeria wine is cheaper than water

Altogether French.

More than four-fifths of Oran is composed of Europeans. The town contains 40,000 French, 30,000 Spaniards and 10,000 Jews. The buildings are almost all of French architecture, and were it not for the Moorish negroes and Berbers, which are sprinkled through the crowd, one might imagine himself in one of the southern cities of France.

The port has all modern landing facilities, including steam cranes and electric lights. A long breakwater has been built out at the west, and the stormy Mediterranean dashes itself against it in vain.

There are cabs at the wharves, and one can ride over smooth roads, which have been cut out of the sides of the mountains, to the upper parts of the city, where the best hotels are. The rates for carriages for two persons are 20 cents a trip, and you can ride all day for 40 cents an hour.

The buildings are just like those of French cities. They are usually of an even height of from three to four stories, built of brick and plastered with stucco of a creamy hue. They have stores and shops on the ground floor and apartments above. The most of the people live in flats or apartments. In every block there is a restaurant or café, with little, round iron tables on the street outside it, about which a motley crowd of drinking coffee, wine, absinthe or some other liquor, gossip and chat, play cards or dominoes, or read newspapers. At the same time there are hawkers and bootblacks moving about begging custom, and newsboys who will give you the latest Oran sheet for one or two sous. The city has a number of dailies, and they publish telegrams from all over the world. The schools, libraries and a museum. There are parks and there throughout the town, under the trees of which one sees French peasant girls sitting and knitting, and are many bareheaded French women moving about now and then a French man in a blouse passes just as in France.

A Merry Monarch.

EDWARD VII IGNORES FORMALITIES AND CONVENTIONALITIES.

From New York Sun.

EDWARD VII of England is the merry monarch of Europe. No other man living today knows better than he how to be happy though reigning.

Only a strict sense of duty and etiquette ever persuades the most friendly ruler in Europe to stop for any length of time under his own royal rooftree, and having both an inclination and a real talent for visiting, he gratifies himself by spending at least eight months of every year on the wing.

The court physicians, knowing what is expected of them, always solemnly insist on the royal digestion being taken to a sprightly German spa for annual repairs and at some period in the round of the twelve months the King looks in on the inspiring French capital for a happy week. But for a daily diet of enjoyment he finds rounds of visits in fine old English country houses just about as satisfying as any recreation he knows, and year after year he goes to stop not only with his old friends, but with new ones, for at 60-odd he is still interested in enlarging his circle of hospitable acquaintances.

From August until after Christmas, and even until the spring season, when London wakes up socially, the King manages to be most of the time out of his great capital, and according to the ideas of the German Emperor, he shows a most reprehensible desire to avoid gold lace uniforms and a taste for plain, loose, easy clothes and for junketing about among his subjects that is manifestly unkingly.

Nevertheless, and in spite of his imperial nephew's point of view, King Edward evades velvet robes and gilded uniforms as often as he decently can, and when he goes a-visiting he sees to it that nothing like royal state hampers his movements.

Months ahead, it is true, he is booked for his visits, and a list of guests to be invited to meet him is submitted for his approval, or he is asked to mention those whom he would like to see; otherwise no unusual arrangements are made in his behalf, except when he is to be the guest of one of the great peers of the realm who enjoy stately shows.

The Duke of Devonshire, Lord Rosebery, Lord Rothschild and the Marquis of Londonderry, for example, are among the personages who greet the King with troops, brass bands and six-horse coaches and torchlight processions. Once a year Edward makes it his business to spend a few days at Dalmeny or Chatsworth witnessing stately entertainments.

On these occasions the Queen goes with him, and there is a great show of gorgeous, costly glitter. But as the years slip by he cares less and less for visiting in state, and for a jolly good time he prefers something vastly more informal and without fuss and feathers.

In a plain gray sack suit, that is neat but certainly not more spick, span or gaudy than the clothes an American man of business might wear, and in a gray derby hat and gray gloves and carrying a stout crook-handled walking stick, the King likes to dress for a trip to a friend's. Sometimes the derby is exchanged for a soft fedora, sometimes the sack suit is brown, but, with the exception of Leopold of Belgium, no European monarch dresses so plainly as Edward VII, and the wonder is where he got his reputation as an arbiter of fashion. The German Emperor is not only far more of a dandy, but it is known that he deeply deplores his uncle's fondness for wearing loose gray tweeds.

Last summer, when King Edward went to see his German nephew, William appeared in uniforms of ever-increasing splendor, his breast blazing with orders, but his amused-looking elderly English relative stuck contentedly to his sack suit, calfskin boots, derby hat and the brand of fat, fragrant cigars which, when he visits at home or abroad, are always carried about in quantities by his valet.

And out in his own home country, all precedents to the contrary, he makes it his business to be comfortable and enjoy himself, and one and all his hosts and hostesses vouch for it that he is an easy and agreeable guest to entertain.

When the shooting season is open he likes to be asked to visit by subjects whose preserves are well stocked, whose garages are full of motor cars, whose cook has a good reputation; and he also likes to have his favorite Highland pony invited, too. This stout, sober-sided little nag is the one on which he enjoys riding about the moors.

A valet and chauffeur and one gentleman attendant are all he requires or takes with him when he visits friends who have small houses or such old acquaintances as the Cassels, the Sassoons, the Savilles or the Colebrooks; and, unlike his mother, he does not demand that his bedding and bathtub and his own cook shall be included in his invitation.

Besides a supply of his favorite brand of cigars, he sometimes has his valet put a caddy full of a special tea in his luggage; yet he does not, in details of luxury, take himself too seriously, and when he visits he requires good food and plenty of outdoor recreation, for the royal digestion copes readily with six meals a day.

Before rising, he takes a round of tea and toast, and at 9:30 he appreciates a hearty British breakfast. By 1:30 he is ready for a hot luncheon and plenty of it; and at 4:30 he will juggle skillfully with a dish of bacon and eggs, not to mention large cups of tea, sandwiches, crumpets, bonbons, cake and other trimmings.

After a good dinner has been discussed and forgotten he feels the need of a trifle to eat and drink before retiring, and he likes to have his meals punctual to the second; but he is not otherwise an unphilosophical guest. If the weather makes shooting or motoring impossible for a morning, he is as happy as a boy if he is taken out to see good horses or dogs, prize pigs or ribbon-winning chickens.

He can spend hours in a stable reveling in the sight of a bit of perfect horseflesh, or he will consider a noble bull, sheep or litter of priceless puppies with all the enthusiasm of a natural-born farmer and lover of fine animals.

Sitting indoors to discuss book or problems is about the only species of so-called recreation that bores the English King, and he ardently hates to be left alone to find companionship in his own thoughts. This cheerful royal person likes to have cheerful people about him, he loves meeting new and lively men and women, he has a genius for drawing a companion out, putting shy folk at their ease, inducing clever ones to talk their best, and he never has any trouble in seeing the point to a joke, be it ever so subtly fine.

Whenever, then, as a consequence of these tastes, he goes to country houses his hosts are careful to ask not only high-spirited, talkative folk and a few witty American women, but a number of expert bridge players. When dinner is over, the King relishes a bit of music, a recitation, his cigar and then an absorbing game.

He would rather play old maid than no cards at all, and he is not overfond of billiards. But let it be set down to his credit that of those who have had the privilege of entertaining him not one has ever been allowed to feel that his hospitable efforts were made in vain.

His courtesy is never failing, his appreciation of a good time is freely and frankly demonstrated, and as a guest he gives royal tips. When the King visits his gentleman attendant dips into the royal purse to the extent of many pounds. The local church and constabulary are all remembered, and the gamekeepers and beaters, the chauffeurs, and even the deserving old women in the villages, are all allowed to rejoice in the royal generosity.

In consequence of this custom, it may be easily recognized that in country-house visiting the King is not pursuing a selfishly economical form of amusement. Sometimes this sociable monarch finds that his zest for visiting gives rise to troublesome misunderstandings.

Some years ago, for instance, a difficulty arose over a visit the King was due to pay at the house of a most dignified Duke. As usual, a list of guests to meet him was submitted to the King. Many of the finest aristocrats in the land, with pedigrees as long as that of the Mikado, were included in the list, but they did not appeal to the King as likely to prove diverting.

By his orders the list was edited, with the result that the elderly Duke nearly had a fit of angry apoplexy when he saw it. Never, he swore, should such a troupe of high flyers darken his doors.

"No guests, no King," was the gist of the answers he received to his objections.

"All right, the King can stop at home," was the substance of the ducal retort, with the consequence that the King failed to honor that particular moated castle, and the Duke refrained from going to court.

Being a touchy man himself, he thereupon took it for granted that he was down in the royal black books. However, it was apparent that he did not know his liege lord very well, and it was an astonished peer of the realm who received a gracious smile from his sovereign when, for the first time after their correspondence, they met face to face.

The King made no reference to their late difference of opinion, for he respects those who stick up for their principles, and greatly regards their independence and the rights of his subjects. He rather likes to be independent himself, and one prime reason why you can travel up and down the British Isles and never find a man or woman who is an enemy to the King is because he never makes angry or sarcastic speeches.

PREHISTORIC REMAINS IN MEXICO.

For the last two weeks Mr. Leopold Batres has been excavating one of the small artificial hills to the southeast of the pyramid of the sun. This is one of the tumuli that form the row of the street of the dead. Here have been discovered a number of rooms which are apparently a part of an ancient temple, with rooms and patios. Below these, stairways lead to a large room some thirty-five feet in length. Apparently there are other rooms on the level connected with one another.

These are the first subterranean houses that have so far been found in the valley, and they show that in this buried city the houses were two and three stories high. The upper stories had been destroyed by fire, but the lower remained untouched, and upon them there still remains the red paint which was the characteristic color of Teotihuacan.

Among the interesting things found is the skeleton of a man supposed to have been one of the ancient Toltec kings. Beside the human skeleton was that of a tiger, and both were painted red. In addition to these, there were also found large quantities of sea shells, obsidian beads, jade and obsidian idols, knives, snakes and polished stone masks, representing heroes who lives 3000 years ago. Many spiral shells were also encountered which had holes drilled through them, showing that they had been used as beads. They were beautifuly polished.

Many copper, bronze, chichehuite and perite objects were also found among the others, showing that the dead man must have been of great importance in his day. Many of these were beautifully polished and of extraordinary size.—[Mexican Herald.

Morgan's Art Treasures.

PRICELESS PICTURES MILLIONAIRE WOULD BRING TO AMERICA.

By a Special Contributor.

FANCY being permitted to rummage leisurely through the most remarkable private house in the world! By permission of the owner imagine yourself in a gallery of masterpieces never before seen save by the occasional connoisseur—masterpieces ranging from million-dollar Fragonard panels, priceless paintings by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Romne, Gainsborough, Rubens and Raphael and the marvelous Mazarin tapestries to busts and bronzes, manuscripts and miniatures aggregating millions of dollars in value! Then remember that this museum of marvels is prevented entrance to the United States by a prohibitive tariff, despite the desire of the collector to transfer it from London to New York—and you will appreciate the action of J. Pierpont Morgan in authorizing Humphrey Ward, husband of the famous novelist, and W. Roberts, the English critic, to ransack his London mansion for photographs and descriptions of its rarest treasures. This story of what they are seeing and picturing in the wonderful twin houses at Princess Gate is the first account ever authorized by the multi-millionaire owner of the art collection which has excited the curiosity of two hemspheres.

Officials Obdurate.

Why, after so many years spent in jealously guarding his London miscellany from the public gaze, has Mr. Morgan suddenly decided to share his gorgeous secret with the world? The answer is obvious. He has spent thousands of dollars in time and probably hundreds of thousands in anxiety to transport his priceless jumble of art to this country during his lifetime. Visits to Washington and conferences with successive Presidents and Secretaries of the Treasury have alike been fruitless. Congress and Secretary Shaw have been adamant. Will Congress and Secretary Cortelyou be equally so, now that solons and savants have an opportunity to realize what American people are missing simply because Mr. Morgan declines to contribute $600,000 or $1,000,000 in duties to Uncle Sam? It has been a case of "London keeping,

New York weeping."

for nearly twenty years, during which time the treasure house at Princes Gate has become the repository of the finest private collection of paintings ever made. Expert opinion, based heretofore largely on assumption, has fixed on $5,000,000 as the cost to its owner of this confusing accumulation of curious, bric-a-brac, paintings, manuscripts, ivories, bronzes and china made when the Chinese Empire was young. According to Messrs. Ward and Roberts, however, it is doubtful whether Mr. Morgan himself knows within several hundred thousand dollars of what his London art possessions are worth. But ten instead of five millions is nearer the figure, declare these authorities, who add that he has levied not only on the near but farthest horizons of the art world with a disregard of expense which had staggered a Caius Maecenas. So lavish, not to say prodigal, has the outlay been that until very recently no attempt was made to arrange the colection coherently. It has typified a riot of magnificence—an embarrassment of riches.

The Famous Cupid.

For example, on entering the house from the street only the trained eye is able to discover, not one or two, but a dozen rarest masters standing or hanging here and there in shadowy corners of the main hall. Scarcely to be discerned among them is a priceless Van Dyke rubbing frames with the famous portrait of Lady Broughton of Romney, In equally obscure regions of the house are partially or totally eclipsed paintings by Reynolds—the "Babes in the Wood," the "Cupid as a Link Boy," the "Lady Betty Delme and Children"—the Godsal Children" by Hoppner and the celebrated portrait of Lady Gideon by Gainsborough, itself worth a mediaeval ransom. In another part of the house hangs the admirable painting of George Viscount Malden and Lady Capel done by Sir Joshua in 1767 for $875. Since then the painting has more than quadrupled itself in value and, in fact, could not be purchased today for $150,000 cash, a price which has been refused.

For the Lady Betty Delme, purchased for $100,000, an offer of $125,000 was recently refused, as has been $125,000 for Ruben's "Grand Duke." which has a conspicuous place in one of the upper rear rooms of the mansion. All told there are five paintings by Reynolds, the one most recently acquired being the "Babes in the Wood," painted in 1770 for Viscount Palmerston for a trifle of fifty guineas, or less than the duty demanded by Uncle Sam today.

Cardinal Mabarin's Tapestries.

Of the four Romneys in the house, the one of Mrs. Glyn and of Lady Hamilton Reading a Paper, as well as a third showing the beautiful adventuress holding a medal or miniature in both hands, are valued at $225,000, exclusive of another $100,000 represented by the magnificent whole length of Mrs. Scott Jackson, declared generations ago, by Sir George [illegible], connoisseur, to be the mellowist and [illegible] picture wrought by Romney.

Ascending the dimly-lighted staircase [illegible] hall and viewing a pair of splendid [illegible] —specimens of the $500,000 tapestries which [illegible] the pride of Cardinal Mazarin—one reaches the hall which is fairly plastered with Greuzes, [illegible] fine pictures by Pater, more Gainsboroughs and al representative paintings by Turner. In a [illegible] ing on this hall is the celebrated Gainsborough length of the Duchess of Devonshire, which photographed for the first time since it was [illegible] years ago. No trace of it was discovered [illegible] as connoisseurs are aware, when the London [illegible] at whose place the theft occurred, received [illegible] in Chicago a parcel which proved to be the masterpiece, the vandal subsequently being [illegible] as Adam Worth, alias Harry Raymond, [illegible] most brilliant criminals of recent time. This has been appraised by experts at $250,000, [illegible] cost Mr. Morgan only two-thirds of that sum.

As a sequel to all of which comes the iterant question: What is to become of it all?

London has long been apprehensive of losing at least the paintings. This apprehension might have extended to the other treasures as well, had anything been definitely known of their amazing extent and value—about which so much mystery has been woven. Hence the growing belief that their owner, by thus acquainting the American people with what is in store for them under certain conditions, hopes to have the embargo raised at least far enough to admit the paintings and statuary into the United States duty free.

The Cowboy of Texas.

WITH THE TEXAS LONGHORN, HE IS PASSING INTO HISTORY.

By a Special Contributor.

OUT Pecos way, the din of hammer and saw in the workshop of progress sounds requiem for the passing cowboy. The intrepid homeseeker is subdividing the once expansive cattle range into farms, truck patches and town lots. The picturesque cowboy has reached the end of the trail. His spurs have jingled in the last round-up. His jaded mustang has flung himself upon the mesquite for a long sleep—the cowboy has unwound his last coil of lariat, he has cast aside his branding iron, and in the vernacular of the slang world, "he is all in."

The cowboy, with the longhorned Texas steer, is doomed to go the way of the pony express, the buffalo and the Indian. Where once the militant longhorn stampeded on the "I.X.L.," the "Bar Z.," or the "Pecos Gulch," the domestic jersey now comes peacefully home at milking time, and the cattle ranch nomenclature of yesteryears is but a memory of what once was.

The people of the United States are stricken by land fever—a fever as intense as that which bouyed up the 49'ers in their quest for gold. Men, women and children are flocking from the congested districts of the older States, to the great Southwest. They want homes, and their onward rush is responsible for the unhorsing of the cowboy and the cleaving of the million-acre ranch into small farms.

Surely, an amazing metamorphosis is under way.

"I allows," sighs the veteran cowboy, "as how when they git t' ther p'int o' shippin' in sacred bulls from Injy, an' makin' cowfeed out o' cactus, it's high time for sich as me to vamoose."

And that is exactly what they are doing in Texas—importing sacred or Brahmin cattle from India, and converting the once despised cactus into stock food. Going still further, these scientific onrushers are experimenting with the cactus on the theory that it can be made to give up denatured alcohol.

What an easthetic flight from the stampeding, uncouth Texas longhorn to the sacred cow from India!

The importing of sacred cattle into Texas may thus far be catalogued as a rich man's fad, perhaps, yet the idea is gaining in popularity nevertheless, and there are prophets on record with the forecast of a day not far into the future when the sacred cattle of India will be very generally inbred with the native product. Col. J. M. Frost, now of Houston, but formerly of Fort Bend county, is accredited with having taken the initiative in the importation of sacred cattle. Several years ago he brought over from India a herd of bulls, and thus the idea got its origin in Texas. Col. Frost, however, tired of cattle raising and sold his India stock to A. P. Borden, a wealthy ranchman of Wharton county, and after Mr. Borden had made a study of the imported cattle for some time, he saw so many points of merit that he decided to enter into the business on a more extended scale. Accordingly, he went to India last autumn and a few weeks ago returned to Texas with forty-six of the sacred cattle. The purchase price paid for the cattle alone was $6000, and the duty amounted to approximately $1500. Buying sacred cattle in India is not so easy as negotiating for the American variety, and Mr. Borden encountered much difficulty. In order to induce the natives to sell their cattle it was necessary to convince them that the animals would not be slaughtered for food. There is a religious belief among the natives of India that cattle embody the souls of dead men, women and children, thus the theory that they are "sacred." Much diplomacy was therefore necessary, and after having satisfied the Indians that it was proper to sell their cattle, Mr. Borden encountered another obstacle in the person of a representative of the veterinary department of the United States government, who was assigned to accompany the Texan for the purpose of inspecting his purchases. This precaution was taken to avoid the possibility of importing diseased animals.

It is claimed for the sacred cattle that they are immune from the ravages of the much-despised Texas tick, that their flesh is more tender and more generally palatable than the beef of the native Texas animal, and, besides, they are much larger. It is the theory of Mr. Borden that excellent results may be obtained by crossing the sacred and the native cattle.

Such lingering remnant of the old-time cowboy element as yet remains in Texas, looks with contempt, however, upon the sacred cattle, and the word "sacred" is always pronounced with a sneer.

Meanwhile, the longhorn has surely had his day, and even where the sacred fad is not deemed practicable, the pure-bred variety, such as is found in Iowa, Kansas, Illinois and adjoining States, is the rule rather than the exception. So common these days are pure-bred cattle in Texas, that the ranchmen of old Mexico have crossed over the border to buy stock for breeding purposes—just another example of the progress of the great Southwest.

The railroad builder has had much to do with the development of Texas, for he blazed the trail and the people followed. Then, as a natural sequence, came the subdivision of the big ranches. All but two of the really great ranches of Texas have already been cut up. These two exceptions are the Paloduro ranch in Donley county, consisting of three million acres, and owned by Mrs. Cordelia Adair of County Meath, Ireland, and the King ranch near Corpus Christi, owned by Mrs. M. H. King, whose acreage totals a trifle over 3,000,000.

Mrs. Adair's ranch is well up toward the tip of the panhandle country, while the estate of Mrs. King is far down upon the gulf coast. A railroad has just been built through the King ranch, tapping the long-neglected Brownsville region, a town by the name of Kingsville has been established on the ranch and it is conceded to be only a question of time until Mrs. King will sell her vast possessions. Then the truck farmer will swoop down upon the land thus opened up, for the gulf coast country is widely heralded as a garden spot. Mrs. Adair's ranch, which is still intact, can hardly be classed as a truck-farming region, but the climatic changes that have occurred in recent years have so played upon the Panhandle soil as to adapt it to general agriculture, it is said. While Mrs. Adair lives in Ireland and spends the greater part of her time in Europe, she is a frequent visitor to her Texas ranch, and the cattle business, which is conducted there on an immense scale, is said to have brought her an annual profit during the past decade of $10,000—and yet the cattle industry is clearly on the wane and the cowboys are fleeing further down the Rio Grande to escape the exacting demands of advanced civilization. Mrs. Adair recently arrived in the United States and is expected to reach her Texas property within a few weeks. Then, so prediction goes in the cow country, she will yield to the general pressure and place her ranch upon the market. Mrs. Adair's vast holding was purchased by her late husband, Dr. Adair, over a quarter century ago, for twenty cents an acre, and it is conservatively asserted that if divided into small tracts it could now easily be disposed of at an average of $15 per acre.

One of the ranches that at one time was particularly noted in Texas, and which has already been made over into farms is the Capitol ranch, so named because of the fact that the three million acres of land comprising it came from the State as part payment to the syndicate of captalists who constructed the Statehouse at Austin. This land, when originally transferred, had a fixed value of only a few cents per acre, while portions of it now sell readily at $2, some even higher, owing to the extent of improvements.

The same progress that is driving the cowboy from Texas is also pushing over into New Mexico and Arizona, and present indications denote that the picturesque fellow of the spurs and six shooter will soon be entirely off of the United States map, over in Mexico, perhaps, there to remain until still further progress make it incumbent upon him to move on again.

If the Niagara Falls were composed of beer instead of water it would fill a stein holding 25,234,720,000 quarts every hour. A man to lift and drink this stein would needs be 353,186,080,211 feet tall. A man who has to live in Chicopee Falls should be able to drink an hour's flow of the falls in 1,097,161,789 days, 2 hours and 52 minutes. Allowing that it takes 14 steins to make a man tight on beer and 18 to get him spifflicated, an hour's flow of the falls would keep the entire Aryan race spifflicated for two days and make the entire Mongolian race tight for a week. The calculations are based on the supposition that the beer should be drawn solid and that the foam would be in proportion to the mist rising above the falls.

If all the rice raised in the United States in 1906 were to be made into cigarette papers there would be enough to roll 251,282,227,194 cigarettes, which would cause Lucy Page Gaston to employ 19 assistants.

It could smell onions cooking on the fixed star Algeneb, provided the hay fever in 44.69 of 1 per cent. of the nose did not affect the entire nose.

Longfellow Centennial.

BIRTH OF THE POET TO BE CELEBRATED THIS WEEK.

By a Special Contributor.

IT was on the 27th of February, 1807, that America's sweet singer, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, first opened his eyes on the great nation which this year will do him homage from ocean to ocean and from Canada to the Gulf. It was a little house standing at the corner of Fore street and Hancock street, in Portland, Me., that the baby Longfellow honored by his arrival. His mother was visiting friends here awaiting the renovation of the mansion which Gen. Peleg had made over to her husband.

Although New England lays first and fullest claim to this genius of our land, and rightly, too, for he was of good old Puritan stock and a son of the "Mayflower soil" himself, the entire country fathers him and rejoices in the lasting influence which he exerted in the realm of poetry.

The marking of the centennial of this dear familiar friend will therefore be national, if not international. Longfellow associations have been formed throughout the States, and each will commemorate the day in some fitting manner. There will be a grand rally in Cambridge, Mass., under the auspices of the Cambridge Historical Society. President Eliot of Harvard will preside. William Dean Howells is to be the principal speaker at the public exercises, and it is anticipated that he will give an address full of feeling, for while he lacked two years of being born when Longfellow published his "Outre Mer" in 1835, still he was in a way a contemporary of the poet, for he was approaching the heyday of his fame a decade before the former died, and his "Out of the Question" and "A Foregone Conclusion" were almost contemporaneous with "Morituri Salutamus," the most finished and artistic of the later-life productions of the bard of Cambridge.

So green is the memory of the venerable Longfellow in the minds of many of our grandparents and so dear a friend does he seem to the present generation it is hard to realize that his boyhood was spent among scenes which the passage of time and the march of progress have materially altered. In the boyhood of Longfellow, Portland maintained trade with the West Indies, its merchants sending thence sugar and rum, and receiving lumber and dried fish in return. Whenever a vessel arrived the town was in excitement, and the little boys were in high glee. The wharf was enlivened all day and all night with the songs of the negro teams, who hauled the hogsheads from the hold with block and tackle. Long lines of board teams creaked along the quays to Portland Pier; sleds groaned by their sides; surveyors ran about like madmen, measuring, shouting, expediting, stopping; cattle steamed in a rim of frost, while their nostrils were hung with icicles; the taverns were lighted up at almost every hour throughout the night, ready to serve drams of hot rum.

The houses and shops were mostly of wood. There was no theater, but churches and spirit stores abounded. "The Freemasons Arms" was then managed by the grandfather of John Lothrop Motley. Few families kept carriages, and of public vehicles there were none to mention. Nearly every house had its barn, and a cow that was driven home through the streets at night from Munjoy Hill. The American stove had not yet been erected like a monument over the ashes of the open fireside. Of course, there were no matches; flint and steel and tinder served. Among the men, cocked hats and bush wigs and knee breeches were going out; the fashion was pantaloons; the hair could still be seen in curls on the older polls. The Portland Gazette and the Eastern Argus each appeared once a week. The money in circulation was Spanish chiefly—dollars, half-dollars, quarters, pistoreens, eights, and sixteenths.

When Henry Longfellow was 5 years old, defensive works were garrisoned on Portland shore to repel the English. About this time a splendid sea fight took place off the coast of Maine. The British brig Boxer, Capt. S. Blythe commander, was captured by the American brig Enterprise, Lieut. W. Burrows in charge. The victorious vessel towed its prize into Portland Harbor and the commanders, who had both been killed in the fight, were buried side by side at the foot of Munjoy Hill.

Such were the sights and sounds that made up so much of the boy Longfellow's experience. Had he died at 25 no one would have been aware that these things had made themselves into the substance of poetry in his mind. But in middle age he gave us the scenes back again in simple lines of "My Lost Youth," of which the first verse is:

"Often I think of the beautiful town
That is seated by the sea;
Often in thought go up and down
The pleasant streets of that dear old town,
And my youth comes back to me.
And a verse of a Lapland song
Is haunting my memory still:
'A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts.'

In "The Ropewalk" and "Keramos" we have sketches from boyhood's days. The school in which he had his "gleams and glooms" was a dame's school, by Ma'am Fellows, whose only recorded maxim was: "One should never smile in school hours." Poor little schoolmistress! She must have come from Sparta. After he had learned to spell at the knees of the instructress the boy attended no fewer than three grammar schools, the last being the Portland Academy, where Jacob Abbott, author of "The Young Christian," was then an usher.

His first attempt at poetry was made while Longfellow was still in school. He was told by his teacher to write his slate and go out and write a poem on some the lasting influence which he exerted in the realm of poetry.

might see. He selected a turnip.

The first real published verse of the poet appeared November 17, 1820, in the Portland Gazette and was entitled "The Battle of Lovell's Pond."

"Cold, cold is the north wind and rude is the blast
That sweeps like a hurricane loudly and fast,
As it moans through the tall waving pines [illegible] drear,
Sighs a requiem sad o'er the warrior's bier.

The war whoop is still, and the savage's yell
Has sunk into silence along the wild dell;
The din of the battle, the tumult is o'er,
And the war clarion's voice is now heard no more.

The warriors that fought for their country and laws
Have sunk to their rest; the damp earth is their couch;
No stone tells the place where their ashes repose,
Nor points out the spot from the graves of their foes.

They died in their glory, surrounded by fame,
And Victory's loud trump their death did proclaim;
They are dead; but they live in each patriot's breast,
And their names are engraven on honor's bright crest.

By and by the Gazette printed other [illegible] peg, and it became known among [illegible] that the signature of "Henry" was Longfellow's school life and his term[illegible] were tranquil and not especially from the fact that he chummed it [illegible] thorne, who was confessedly the lazi[illegible] of the class.

How and when Longfellow wrote his ver[illegible] are all familiar is a lesson too recen[illegible] schoolroom to require repetition. [illegible] about eighteen years of academic wo[illegible] he felt warranted in resigning his P[illegible] ship. His fame was at that time ass[illegible] of his books brought him an am[illegible] ney.

In the prime of his life he was indubit[illegible] best, wealthiest, kindliest, best-manne[illegible] erica; and he was also the most popul[illegible] his beautiful wife and his five chil[illegible] gle House, for the greater part of ev[illegible] sunshine of a hospitable and well-o[illegible] was managed in this home in the fr[illegible] America; its latchstring was ever out, [illegible] like the dwellings of the A[illegible] as day and the hearts of [illegible] the owners." Nevertheless, the poet w[illegible] ed in it; when he chose to mingle w[illegible] his friends, they welcomed him; but[illegible] y of his royally furnished library, he [illegible] lia's quiet when he wished. Perhap[illegible] sity of the public intrusive to a gal[illegible] ; still he encouraged it, and for hours[illegible] he would receive calls from the inqu[illegible] his table writing scores of autographs [illegible] ners. Such patience might spring [illegible] ess for even undiscriminating admi[illegible] still more from unfailing benigni[illegible] should people wish to see him, or h[illegible] except to add a pleasure to thei[illegible] re was granted in every case that w[illegible] ble. [illegible]e see that the wine of life was trembli[illegible] up of our poet, in and before his fifty-fo[illegible] fatal year of 1861—when his wife was [illegible] before his eyes. To amuse her younge[illegible] Longfellow had been making seals; a li[illegible] x fell into her lap, and her skirts of gau[illegible] loped her in flames. Hearing his wife s[illegible] rushed from his study in time to snatch [illegible] e it round her ere she fell, mortally inju[illegible] the days when Miles Standish first str[illegible] England, the graves of the English dead [illegible] the Indians by being covered with wa[illegible] grave that held his beloved in his heart, [illegible] from his friends. The next published work of the poet was "[illegible]ide Inn" (1863). In stringing toge[illegible] ales" the author lays hold of Chaucer's dev[illegible] ing a few contrasting figures to act as ste[illegible] have a jolly landlord, who is also a squire [illegible] of the peace; a student, learned in chivalr[illegible] Jew from Alicante, altogether a figure o[illegible] derness; a sunny-minded theologian; a N[illegible] ; a Sicilian, and a poet. These worthies m[illegible] side Inn," of course, and the Tales are ge[illegible] course of their talks.

The scene and the characters thus used to [illegible] "Tales" were all drawn from reality. In [illegible] dbury, twenty miles from Cambridge, w[illegible] called "The Red Horse Tavern"—a large, [illegible]-roofed hostelry, surrounded by fine tr[illegible] as landlord and squire of the parish, w[illegible] rans, a gentleman of good descent called [illegible] ve's bar-parlor Longfellow brought, in im[illegible] W. ...The scenes and the characters thus used to introduce ...the Tales" were all drawn from reality. To ...this bar-parlor Longfellow brought, in imagination, ...Parsons, the translator of "Dante;" Luigi Monti, ...Italian; Prof. Treadwell of Harvard theological fac- ...ulty; the scholar, Henry Ware Wales; the violinist, Ole Bull; and a notable Jew called Israel Edulel. These became the Poet, Sicilian, Theologian, Student, Musician, Spanish Jew. And the landlord, who tells the first and best tale is old Howe himself. It is very pleasant to know from Longfellow that we are warranted in supposing these men to have been the original types he selected. We recognize the every glad countenance of Ole Bull in this character sketch:

"Fair-haired, blue-eyed, his aspect blithe,
His figure tall and straight and lithe,
And every feature of his face
Revealing his Norwegian race;
A radiance streaming from within,
Around his eyes and forehead beamed
The Angel with the violin, Painted by Raphael, he seemed."

To see one's friends aging is sadder than to feel old. In 1864 Nathaniel Hawthorne, "gray and grand," fell out of the ranks of America's great men. Longfellow's melody on Hawthorne's death appeared in the volume called "Flower-de-Luce and Other Poems" (1867). Felton was gone, too. One day Agassiz sat down in Longfellow's study and wept like a child, because he had lost his power to work; then he rallied for a space and died in harness. A few chilly entries in the diary show how much the poet felt his increased loneliness; he was sitting out the fire. But meanwhile, he did not slacken his literary efforts.

In May of 1868 Longfellow sailed for Europe, and in England he began an enjoyable tour that extended through eighteen months. Cambridge University gladly took occasion to bestow upon him the degree of LL.D. In London he was pulled about by all the celebrated people, and Mr. Gladstone proposed his health at a great dinner. Returning from Italy, he obtained further academic recognition from England, this time in the Oxford degree of D.C.L.

The Queen sent for him, and the republican shook Her Majesty simply by the hand, on being introduced. At last, a little wearied of being made so much of, he longingly hied back to his native land, paid his taxes as soon as he reached Craigie House, and thus "felt at home again."

In Harper's Magazine for March, 1882, the aged poet read an account of a ruined convent in Mexico, and by one passage about the convent bells was roused to write his last song—the song about the "Bells of San Blas." These lines conclude the poem, and ended his singing forever:

"Out of the shadow of night
The world rolls into light;
It is daybreak everywhere!"

That was the last grand line of a whole-hearted poet, who had never lost faith in his God, and still hoped, like Goethe, for "more light!"

On Friday, March 24, 1882, Henry Longfellow sank peacefully in death, aged 75. Peritonitis had hastened the natural decay. Amid gently-falling snow he was buried in the cemetery of Mount Auburn, near Cambridge.

Sculptors are finding inspiration in the coming centennial, and it is to be expected that our large cities will be richer by a number of busts and monuments of the poet after February 27.

New Postage Stamps.

THE SETTLEMENT AT JAMESTOWN, VA., TO BE COMMEMORATED.

By a Special Contributor.

THE Bureau of Engraving and Printing, in Washington, is preparing to print the new series of postage stamps to commemorate the Jamestown settlement and to be issued contemporaneously with the opening of the exposition at Norfolk, May 1.

The striking feature of these stamps will be a negative one—none of the stamps will portray either Capt. John Smith, whose life was saved by the Indian maiden, Pocahontas, or Pocahontas herself. Such a condition of affairs seems almost as incongruous to the half-million stamp collectors in the United States as would the omission of Hamlet in the Shakespearean tragedy of that name, to theater-gores, and yet it is true.

When the Postoffice Department, after having previously turned down cold the Lewis and Clark exposition people, who in accordance with previous custom, asked for a special series of stamps for the Portland Exposition, yielded to strong pressure and finally agreed the Jamestown show should have special stamps, it was regarded as a foregone conclusion that either Pocahontas or Capt. John Smith, and probably both, would be pictured on the stamps. The department officials charged with the issue of stamps indicated to the public that sketches and suggestions for the new stamps would be received and inviting them.

As a result the department received great numbers of suggestions, and a large majority favored the depicting of Capt. John Smith and Pocahontas upon the stamps. The officials of the department were disposed to follow the ideas so generally proposed and set about obtaining photographs of the parties to the historic event which made them famous. After having searched the entire country for likenesses of Pocahontas, the department officials were compelled to abandon absolutely the thought of portraying the Indian maiden upon a postage stamp that should circulate among a civilized people. Even the photograph of Pocahontas which appeared to flatter her depicted a female so ugly that the men charged with responsibility for the production of stamp designs simply threw up their hands and declared it could not be; that Pocahontas was simply impossible.

Fairly good portraits of Capt. John Smith were found, but it was not deemed advisable to honor the gallant captain without showing equal courtesy to the dashing redskin in petticoats who had saved his life at a time when his life was very dear to him. Thus the hero of Jamestown suffers because of the lack of personal charms in his dusky savior.

After eliminating Capt. Smith and Pocahontas from the list of eligibles, the department experts were completely at sea what to do. It was proposed by many that a picture of the first church erected in America, at Jamestown, should adorn one of the stamps. This church was in fact simply four long poles stuck in the ground over which was spread a ship's sail. The engravers at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing did not seem to think this could be worked up into a satisfactory design, and it also was abandoned.

It has, however, been decided that one of the stamps shall depict a water scene, a group of people standing by the ocean and welcoming or bidding adieu a fleet of vessels standing out from the land. This design has been approved, and the engravers are now at work on the plate. The design for the other stamp has not been selected.

The series, if indeed it can be termed a "series," will consist of but two stamps of the value of one and two cents. A strong effort was made to increase this number to three so as to include a five-cent denomination for foreign postage, but the department adhered to its original purpose to restrict the stamps to two denominations.

The Jamestown stamps will be the fifth commemorative series issued by the department. First came the Columbian series, in 1893, comprising sixteen denominations from 1 cent to $5, generally regarded as among the most beautiful stamps ever issued. The Omaha or Trans-Mississippi series followed in 1898 with nine denominations from 1 cent to $2. Next came the Buffalo, or Pan-American, series, famous because of their two colors and the scarce copies with the central picture upside down, a copy of the 2-cent of which sells at about $200. This series appeared in 1901, and consisted only of the 1, 2, 4, 5, 8 and 10-cent denominations. In 1904 the department issued the Louisiana Purchase, or St. Louis, stamps, still further reducing the number of values to five, the 1, 2, 3, 5 and 10 cents.

The department was adverse to giving the Jamestown people more than a single special stamp, the 2-cent denomination, but finally agreed to include the 1-cent. With only the two values, three stamps will be required to frank a letter to a foreign country, and a parcel requiring 16-cent postage will need eight stamps. The stamps for Jamestown will be of about the size of the Pan-American, slightly smaller than the current stamps longer horizontally than vertically, and will be printed only in one color—the 2-cent red and the 1-cent green. These stamps will be on sale contemporaneous with the exposition, and their sale will cease with the close of the show, although the stamps will still be good for postage as are all the commemorative stamps ever issued by the United States. The stamps will be supplied to all postmasters asking for them, but it is understood the regular issue will be supplied patrons unless the special stamps are asked for.

Several millions of collectors throughout the world are eagerly awaiting the appearance of the new stamps, and sufficient numbers will be sold to collectors to pay the cost of making the new designs and plates.

THE MOON'S VOLCANOES.

It is evident to any one who glances upward at the moon that its volcanoes are on an immensely larger scale than those which stud our globe. One explanation, now abandoned, is that the force of gravitation being there only one-sixth that of the earth the matter expelled from a crater would be spread far more widely, and explosions would be generally on a far more magnificent scale. Prof. Pickering quotes this theory only to refute it in some comparisons which he has made between the great volcanic region of Hawaii and one of the smaller craters of the moon. The facts seem to him to be that the larger craters on the moon came into existence when the thin solid crust covering the molten interior was, owing to its solidification and contraction of the crust much too small to contain the liquid material. The craters were, therefore, formed by the lava bursting through the crust and so relieving the pressure. Later, after this relief had been found and the crust had thickened, the interior regions by cooling shrank away from the solid shell, which was now too large, and, being insufficiently supported, caved in, permitting the great fissure eruptions which produced the so-called Lunar Seas. These extensive outflows of lava dissolved the original solid shell whenever they came into contact with it, much as they do in the present day in Hawaii. Had the moon been much smaller these eruptions might not have occurred at all; and if the moon had been much larger their relative size would have been greater. Most probably on the earth similar outbursts were greater, and our original gigantic craters were destroyed by the outflow of the earlier archaic rocks which completely submerged and dissolved them. —[London Morning Post.

COOLEEMEE SOCIETY ITEM.

Miss Jennie Jones and Bob Henry were married at the Jones mansion last night. The bride is the daughter of our constable, Jones, who made a good officer, and will undoubtedly be reëlected next spring. He offers a fine horse for sale in another column. The groom runs a grocery store on Main street, and is a good patron of our advertising columns, and has a good line of bargains this week. All the summer he paid 2 cents more for butter than any other store in town. The happy couple left on the 10 o'clock train for Milwaukee to visit the bride's uncle, who is reported to have lots of money and Bright's disease. Bob certainly has an eye for business.—[Cooleemee (N. C.) Banner.

Munich in Winter.

A Sleighing Party to a Royal Country Place.

By a Special Contributor.

THE Snow King was holding high carnival in Munich. On New Year's Eve the first scurrying flashes had fallen, and for the following six weeks they had been trying energetically to bury the city. There were ramparts of snow waist-high along every street, for no sooner had the patient street sweepers (mostly women!) cleared the ways, than down would come the white, feathery armies, swiftly and gaily and silently, to cover them again.

There came a day that February, when the snow and the icicles and the hoar frost (that greatest wonder-worker of them all) had done their utmost, and the sun, coming out to see what they had been about, turned the world into a glittering, dazzling fairyland.

A sleigh ride had been projected for weeks. All kinds of wild excursions had been planned by the fireside—(or "stoveside," to be quite correct.) It had even been suggested that one might easily take the train to a certain village some hours away, and go by sleigh from there over the mountains to Oberammergau.

However, with all these fine things to do, we had stayed at home, gossiping cosily over the tea table, while the wind howled and whistled at the windows—and how the wind can blow at Munich!

But that day, with the sun shining and the wind at rest, it was different. Some one, at the midday meal, reported the Maximilian Platz to be full of sleighs standing in rows, for hire, and straightway a dienstmann was dispatched to get one. A dienstmann, be it explained, is one of a company of messengers who are stationed at street corners throughout the city, and who serve the purpose of a telephone system. They are for the most part ruddy-faced, bewhiskered individuals, who take the liveliest personal interest in their errands.

Our particular dienstmann beamed at us in the most fatherly manner as we emerged into the street, armed with furs and wraps and shawls, and waved a majestic arm toward the sleigh, declaring it to be the most comfortable as well as the finest to be had—and the driver, a good friend of his, too, who would do what was right by the "gracious ladies."

We were four women, with a French poodle as escort—Smut by name—a dog of travel and culture, who was as much at home on the streets of Munich or Paris or Rome, as in his master's garden on the Isle of Wight. Since his own woolly black coat was cut into fantastic knobs and bands, that left him in parts exposed to the weather, he was muffled in a warm fur cape, and. thus adorned, sat on the box beside the driver, with all the composure of a hardened footman.

There had been a hasty dipping into guide books, to find a goal which should be suitable.

"There's Schleissheim," one had suggested.

"What is it?" asked another, "a monastery or a brewery?"

"Neither," came the answer; "it's a royal palace of a hunting lodge or something, and it's well worth seeing!"

"All right," sang the chorus; "that will do!" So Schleissheim it was. The city's streets were gay with people as we slipped on our cheerful jingling way (a ripple of laughter following the quaint, solemn figure of Smut on the box) across the spreading Odeon Platz, under an archway, into the great square of the Hofgarten, which is bounded on one side by the stately facade of the Residenz and on the others by low walls whose protecting arcades form the most popular promenade in all Munich. Then out again, through another archway to the English garden, that long, narrow park stretching almost from the city's heart to its outer boundaries.

The park looked as if it might be the veritable abode of Kris Kringle, trees and shrubs being decked in a sparkling glory of hoar frost, lawns spread with purest white, each vista more beautiful than the last. The big lake, which had been cleared of snow, was dotted thickly with skaters, who pirouetted about its glassy surface in the most picturesque confusion. Every grade of society was represented in the merry procession that whisked past us, from the daughters of princely houses, in jaunty, fur-trimmed costumes, to street urchins in ragged coats and red woolen "fascinators"—for this is Germany's best-loved sport.

But the driver ventured to suggest apologetically that stopping to watch the skating was not going to Schleissheim, which he said was ever so many kilometers away.

The distance in kilometers conveyed no impression whatever to our minds, and none of us cared to retire into mental seclusion long enough to figure out how many miles that would be. We had forgotten, anyway, whether it was so many miles to a kilometer, or so many kilometers to a mile, and, worse still, did not care.

Leaving the shouting, laughing crowd of skaters farther and farther behind, we turned off into a side street, striking the broad, straight Ludwig strasse just before its dignified exit from the city, under the huge triumphal arch—a copy of Constantine's arch at Rome.

The pretentious boulevard became at once an unsophisticated country road, whose path across the great, bleak plains was marked by a double line of trees, bare but for the jewels of the snow king. Here the air, untrammeled in its wanderings, blew fresh and stingingly against our faces, and Smut, whose taste for scenery was somewhat undeveloped, turned first an inquiring ear and then an appealing eye backwards, and, getting an encouraging laugh in answer, tumbled into the midst of us, cape and all, and was charmed at being allowed to exchange the office of footman for that of foot-warmer.

Soon a curve in the road hid the city from view, and in a moment we were in a world as still and desolate and beautiful as one could ever hope to see.

Against the far horizon stood the mountains, faintly outlined, scarcely seeming real, and stretching toward them, away and away, was the trackless plains—an unbroken sweep of glistening white. Unbroken till the dark line appeared which marked the forest, and this drew near and nearer still, until it covered our row of trees and the road and us.

Here were wonderful vistas, full of mysterious lights and shadows, and a solemn, deathlike stillness, which made the jingle of our sleighbells sound almost impertinent. Now and then a startled deer leaped into sight and was gone again.

The marks of their little feet were scattered thickly about the snow, for in the shelter of the forest food had been placed for them. It would never do to let the soft-eyed creatures starve, when there was such sport to be had, later, in hunting them!

The forest proved to be but a narrow band across the plain, and soon we were in the open again, with the park and buildings of Schleissheim in view.

With a crack of the whip and a clatter of bells we drew up, at length, before a little brown inn which looked like a frosted Christmas card, standing as it did in the midst of a clump of trees, icicles suspended from its overhanging eaves, and the smoke curling out of its chimney.

Inside was warmth and a welcome, and the buxom, red-cheeked mistress of the place, in throwing open the door of the chief guest chamber, disclosed a picture which Defraeger might have painted.

The room was long and low, with raftered ceiling and square-paned windows, rough tables and benches scattered about it, and gathered in one corner was a group of peasant lads, in animated conversation over their long-stemmed pipes. A respectable silence fell upon them at our entrance, and in obedience to a look from the mistress, they picked up their round green hats with the gay cock's feathers, and with a good deal of awkward bowing and much shuffling of feet, they took their departure.

Straightway a steaming coffee pot made its appearance, accompanied by the omnipresent schwarzbrot sandwiches, and thus warmed and fortified we started to walk about the palace grounds, having been told that the palace itself was closed to visitors in the winter.

There was a fine central building, and two wings connected to it by graceful, one-story colonnades, the whole being most satisfying architecturally. But the fact of entrance being forbidden, gave to the interior a subtle and irresistible attraction, and seeing the keeper of the lodge issuing from his door, we laid siege to him with the most persuasive German at our command. He was a bearded, uniformed official of imposing proportions, but had child-like blue eyes which twinkled reassuringly and seemed to promise easy victory.

"The ladies will freeze," he protested; "it is too cold within." But when we insisted that we were indifferent to temperature, he shrugged his shoulders and went after his bunch of keys.

The great door opened with a creaking protest, and the icy air of all the winter months rushed out to meet us.

On the landing of the gorgeous marble staircase we came face to face with a full-length portrait of Ludwig II—so lifelike, so full of the fire and charm of youth that we stopped in startled admiration. Clad in white, his handsome head thrown back, an ermine cape falling from his shoulders, he was truly a king among men. No wonder his people were willing to lie down and be trampled in the dust (figuratively speaking) and let him ride over them. He knew so well how to play the part of king, that they could begrudge him no show that was fitting, let the cost be what it might.

"Ah! there was a king!" said the keeper, as we stood spellbound before the picture. There was only this Ludwig, yet something of his wonderful personality ism is felt at every spot associated with him.

One thought of all the tales of his magnificence, for example, in the Munich gilded sleigh, for example, in the Munich gilded sleigh, its beautiful carved figure of a woman holding a lantern, cupids sporting at her feet—its cushions of blue velvet, the ermine rug. On such a day one might have been seen speeding across the snow in some gem-like creation of his fancy, drawn by prancing horses. "Not such a crazy thing to do, after all," he decided.

But the keeper was rattling his keys impatience, and the cold was biting.

It was a strange experience, that horrid through the closed, deserted palace, with its coed halls and tapestried bedchambers, and steps wakened ghostly echoes in the frozen

It was with something of consternation denly remembered the "kilometers" Munich and supper, and bringing our hasty conclusion, we left our good-natured many and complicated expressions of sides.

[illegible]arily by experimenting with cattle he hopes to [illegible] whether the quality of Holstein milk, already [illegible] for its remarkable quantity, can be improved by [illegible] with the Jersey. Dr. Alexander Graham Bell [illegible] the station with two of his five-nippled [illegible] ewes and one of his six-nippled rams. With [illegible] it is proposed to experiment in the very practical [illegible] of increasing the number of milk glands in [illegible]. There have been obtained also two Irish goats, [illegible] upon the neck two well-developed wattles [illegible] other with only one such peculiarity. These [illegible] appear in the form of a flap of skin, or [illegible] ear, on each side of the neck of some do-[illegible]. They sometimes appear also on man. The [illegible] of goats so adorned with others not thus dis-tinguished will serve, as in the other experiments, to throw light upon the problems of heredity.

Experiments with poultry have yielded quicker results, since two generations can be reared to maturity in a single year.

Dr. Davenport has pursued this study by aid of a series of twenty-nine pens, each containing a cock and one or more hens. To separate the eggs of different hens he uses "trap nets," which hold the laying hen until her number is written, with date, upon the egg. Before being placed in the incubator all eggs are carefully listed, and those of different parentages are separated into compartments, so that the father and mother of each chick may be definitely known.

A leg band bearing identification data is applied to each newly-hatched chick the moment of its removal from the incubator. By these means the director has gained in one year 1500 offsprings derived from known parents and has reared about 500 of them to a period when their adult plumage characteristics are distinguishable. A "plumage chart—" a card with feathers attached—of each of the 1500 offspring is kept and each fowl is regularly photographed. Thirteen races of parent chickens were employed in the first series of cross-breeding experiments lately completed. Among these are such varieties as houdans, frizzles, silkies, tosa fowls, rumpless game bantams, selected because of their striking contrasts to one another.

Adding Toes to Guinea Pigs.

A race of four-toed guinea pigs has similarly been produced by W. E. Castle, one of the biologists of the station. Normal guinea pigs have only three toes on each hind foot. What correspond to our "big" and "little" toes are lacking. Mr. Castle has succeeded in producing a race with the little toe added. One of his normal mothers gave birth to three young guinea pigs, the largest of which surprised the biologist by displaying the extra little toe. With this single freak as a parent Mr. Castle then produced the now well-established four-toed race. In other experiments with 3000 guinea pigs and several hundred rabbits he has produced other new individual sorts, characterized by peculiar qualities of hair and coat markings. His original parent stock vary from long-haired, rough albinos from Peru—resembling living tassels of white silk—to short-haired blackish-red individuals of the English variety. The offspring of these and other crosses show curios characteristics. Some look like balls of long hair, "cowlicked" all over; others like balls of delicate feathers, and still others appear to have the bodies of guinea pigs, but the tails and topknots of cocks.

Changing the Colors of Bugs.

Studies of the inheritance of the color patterns of asparagus beetles are also being made. These patterns vary from light spots on a dark ground to dark spots on a light ground. F. E. Lutz, in charge of this work, is testing the possibility of changing these patterns at will by altering the temperature of the cages in which the beetles are bred. He is trying also to create a strain which will produce three generations a year instead of two. Experiments are being made also with webworms, crickets, squash beetles and lady beetles. Roswell H. Johnson, working with lady beetles, has made the incidental discovery that these insects when disturbed exude from some joints of their legs a fluid tasting like aloes, which is distasteful to birds. The secretion of this flavoring extract is evidently the lady beetles' natural means of protection. The problem of supplying all of these insects with food has been a troublesome one. Plant lice, for example, are even more essential to the diet of the lady beetle than are baked beans to the Bostonian or hot bread to the Virginian. Hence a plant-louse hatchery has had to be set up in the station for the special convenience of this hungry species.

May Lead to Superman.

This business of inventing to order beetles with certain spots, guinea pigs with four toes, goats with wattles and deaf cats with extra toes appears upon superficial glance to be useless and silly as compared with the increase of the milk quality of Jersey cows or of the milk glands of the sheep. The enterprise of increasing the annual generations of asparagus bugs will not at first blush appear particularly practical, especially from the point of view of the farmer. But it is from the smallest creatures being thus experimented with at the station that the quickest results in this work of learning the laws of heredity can be obtained. If they confined their experiments to cattle, for example, these enterprising biologists would have to pass their labors on to their grandchildren or great-grandchildren. But the three-generation-a-year beetle will be a grandfather before a calf, a kid or a lamb has learned to take care of itself. Hence the invention of this apparently useless insect, by which the process of evolution can be hurried, that impatient man may all the quicker learn the laws which will enable him to mold the animal and vegetable kingdoms to best suit his commercial interests. And, far more important still, these experiments are expected to result in teaching man how to improve his own kind, mentally, moraly and physically; how, in fact, to eventually create the superman.

This is because the laws of heredity governing the evolution of the humblest asparagus beetle, or even the most despised louse of this station's louse hatchery, are practically the same as those which have controlled the evolution of kings or—what is more—of great geniuses. This close relationship of law is seen between even the vegetable and animal kingdoms. In fact, the new law of evolution, discovered with the aid of plants by Prof. Hugo de Vries of Amsterdam—a law which now has the scientific world by the ears—is being applied with success to animals by Prof. Davenport, who regards it as "destined to be the foundation stone of the rising science of experimental evolution."

Proves Darwin Wrong.

We believed this whole question of evolution to have been cut and dried, settled for good and all, in the past century by the great Darwin. But out of Amsterdam has come this new genius, picking flaws in the Darwinian theory. Evolutionists of the Darwinian school have been teaching that new species develop by a series of very slow and gradual changes, occurring about equally to all individuals of a locality; that the whole group is changed in one direction by the forces of environment. They have also taught that when two breeds are crossed their characters usually become intimately blended. They have recognized that individual differences crop out, but have held that all individuals of a group from time to time intercross and that no single one has gotten very far ahead of the general run. Thus they hold that the whole family has changed only gradually and a common form has made its appearance with the same gradual degree that the old form has disappeared.

These Darwinian evolutionists have further held that many billions of millions of years at least must have elapsed since these processes commenced, whereas the world's greatest physicists and astronomers estimate the age of the earth at some millions of years only. This discrepancy has been a weapon in the hands of the opponents of the Darwinian theory. To bring order out of this chaos De Vries commenced direct experimental inquiries. He at last caught a wild species in the very act of producing new forms suddenly and not gradually. For eighteen years he has been studying it in its wild locality, and it has steadily continued to repeat the phenomenon.

Seeing Species Originate.

He finally brought it to his garden in Amsterdam where, as he says, "under my very eyes, the production of new species has been going on, rather increasing in rate than diminishing. The fact is that it has become possible to see species originate and that this origin is sudden and obeys distinct laws." The species which thus upset a part of the Darwinian theory is a native of the United States—an evening primrose. Prof. Ve Vries announced two years ago that these sudden changes in nature could not be produced artificially, but that their occurrence could be predicted in some cases with enough probability to justify the trial.

That the discovery applies to animals as well as to plants is seen at our "Station for Experimental Evolution," at Cold Spring Harbor. The work here, with animals and plants alike, indicates that evolution advances by steps or jumps, that a new species does not arise from an old one gradually, but suddenly. So instead of trying to produce evolution by the process of "selection," as stock breeders and botanists have largely done heretofore, Dr. Davenport considers it more important to look for the "sports" or "freaks" caused by sudden evolution and to use these as the foundations of new races. To accomplish this he breeds according to rules too technical for explanation here. A number of generations must be produced by various processes of in-breeding, out-breeding, cross-breeding, and what not, before a new race can be established. He is seeking new laws of heredity and evolution rather than the perfection of any new and valuable races, which task he will leave to others after he has discovered the law. And mark again what he says in this connection:

"Since when we know the law we may control the process, the principles of evolution wil show the way to an improvement of the human species."

Here then is the question:

The law for creating, at will, a race of "white, blue-eyed, deaf, long-haired, tailless, polydactyl" cats having thus been discovered will not the same law enable science to breed, at will, a race of big-brained, deep-chested, fleet-limbed, strong-muscled, human geniuses, with lofty morals, acute senses and blood highly resistant to the bacilli of disease?

A Red-Letter Day.

AN OUTING AMONG THE HILLS AND THE BIRDS.

By a Special Contributor.

SUCH a panorama as lay spread out before me! I had climbed the steep hill without stopping to look back, and now, as I turned, the beauty of it all came full upon me, and, involuntarily, I gave an exclamation of delight. Surely it was a view of which one would never tire, and it was one that changed with the mere turning of the head.

The hill on which I rested was studded with live oak trees, making a thing of beauty to look down upon. On the extreme right Eagle Rock stood out in prominence, its light barren surface showing clear-cut against the green-clad hills behind it. The outstretched eagle blazoned on its face was not as plain as it would be when the sun was higher and the shadow stronger.

To the extreme left, through a little valley whose emerald hillsides framed the picture and made it a most pleasing one, lay New York Valley and the hills of Highland Park, which lie back, and south, of Occidental College. Everything was green save the brown roadways and the various-colored houses. Still beyond all this, behind another hill, rose the smoke of the city of Los Angeles.

Before me—but how shall I describe it? When I close my eyes I see it yet, but how to make my readers do so is another matter. At my feet lay stretched out in all its winter beauty that matchless valley, Eagle Rock, with its many homes snuggled against the foothills, its rows of green orange trees, its deciduous fruit trees now bare and with purple limbs outlined against the green ground beneath them; its rolling hills, some green with chaparral through which the greener grass was showing; some brown, some almost golden with grain stubble, some soft and gray with tall dry weeds; and towering over all this patchwork, varied-colored ground, rose stately, straight eucalyptus trees like sentinels.

This little valley which for so many years has been known for its highly cultivated ranches, whose vegetables in winter and fruit in summer brought the highest prices, because of their superior flavor, has lately been invaded by electric railroad, and the ranches have been cut up into small town lots, where, in the course of time, many beautiful homes will stand.

Stretching away beyond this beauty spot lay the San Fernando Valley, its trees and villages standing out in the bright sunshine. Behind them rose a dark range of foothills, and still farther away I caught a glimpse of a snow-capped mountain.

Opposite me, behind the fertile valley, rose deeply-furrowed foothills, and behind them other tiers of hills and mountains.

At the extreme right, behind the rock which gives this little valley its name, rose the long range of the Sierra Madre still snow-capped in spite of the many days of warm sunshine. With my glass I could see a bit of the incline to Mt. Lowe, and the trail going on to Alpine Tavern, beside which the white observatory stood out in relief against the blue mountains.

Though for the most part peace and quiet lay over the valley, some sounds floated up to me. Below me a large wagon drawn by four horses rumbled by. It was loaded with buff standstone taken a little farther along from the very hill where I was sitting. In the distance some one was chopping wood; an engine pumping water was chug-chugging in methodical monotony; not far away a man was burning off the dry weeds, and the crackling of the fire was added to the other noises. From the lower end of the valley a bell was ringing, and though I could not see the electric car, I could hear it whirring along.

Hens cackled, roosters crowed; and in contrast to these unmusical noises came floating up to me the liquid song of the meadow lark, clear, loud and decisive. There is something so spring-like, so hopeful—and yet so musical, in that wild song of the meadows.

All about me, from the chaparral below and the trees above, sounded the call notes and songs of many birds. The very first one that I scared up in my upward climb was the common towhee. Wherever I go I meet this bird. Whether it be in my own yard, in the Arroyo Seco, on the foothills, in the valleys, or cañons, this bird is always the commonest, and tamest. And he is always welcome. Though a somber brown in coloring, there is something so confiding, so restful about him that I cannot help but like him in spite of his plebeian garb and his lack of any sweet song. For though at the nesting time he has a song which, mocker fashion, he shouts from the housetops, ordinarily it is a thin, monotonous "chip" that one hears.

That winter visitor, the Audubon warbler, held a close second to the towhees in numbers and sociability. In and out among the treetops these little birds foraged, making quick sallies into the air in pursuit of insects, the white patches on their tails, and their bright yellow rump showing conspicuously as they flew. The tiny ruby-crowned kinglets were also about, their olive plumage blending with the dull green of the oak trees where they foraged for minute insect life. As if fearing that, because of their perfect protective coloration, they would be overlooked, these midgets kept up a loud chattering that made them easily located.

The noisy scratching in the underbrush, and the drawled catlike "Me-ow," told me that a spurred towhee was at work. Presently one of these beautiful birds flew up into the top of an oak tree just opposite me, and from there down into a pile of cuttings below me. The ful beauty of his black head, red eye, black and white back, bright rufous sides bordering a white breast, were easily studied as he fearlessly hopped about so near me.

Not far away sounded the liquid "chuck" of the dwarf hermit thrush. These pretty brown birds with their white breasts speckled with brown, have been unusually common this winter. They have not proved to be very shy, one of them coming many times a day up from the arroyo to get the crumbs thrown out for the birds by a bird lover. They are extremely restless birds, the wings being twitched almost constantly. They seem this winter to have been most unfortunate—three dead ones having come into my possession within a few days.

There is another bird of this family who, like this one, is a winter visitor only, and who I presume was on the hillside with me had I been clever enough to have seen it, or quiet enough to have induced it to come to my locality. It is a bird that I have had an opportunity to study this winter for the first time—the varied thrush. In size and shape it resembles the robin, and is, indeed, sometimes called the varied robin. Its upper parts are dark-slate-colored, its throat and breast, which are separated by a black crescent, are a light burnt-orange. A wide black patch passes through the eyes, above which is a light orange stripe. There are also dull orange stripes on the wings. The high breast, barred by the bright crescent, and the stripe over the eyes make these birds very showy as well as very beautiful ones.

The peculiar ringing call of the wren-tit sounded all about me; also other noises which I was sure came from this same bird, for his ability to make odd notes is great. The common black phoebe, and his cousin, the Say phoebe, who is a winter visitor only, were among the trees, each intent upon flycatching exploits—the Say giving his plaintive "Phee-u," accompanied by a twitch of the tail, and the black relative saying "Phoeb." In the distance I heard the shrill "Peauk" of the red-shafted flicker, and soon one of these big birds came flying over, his white rump and red tail and wing shafts making him very showy. A party of jolly bush tits foraged in the oak tops; a western gnatcatcher in his blue-drab suit called "Tzee" as he flitted about; a dear little brown titmouse called: "See—day-day, see—day-day" in his loud positive way, as if he were the only one in the woods worth noticing. And, indeed, I thought him one of the most charming.

But the most beautiful song that I heard while on this hillside came from the Pasadena thrashers. They are large, brown birds, having very long sickle-shaped bills. They get their food from the ground, but when they come to sing they mount a limb, and often they are accommodating enough to choose a bare one, and there they pour forth a song that is loud, clear and beautiful. at first one might take it for that of the mocking bird, but it has a depth and richness that the mocker's song lacks. I heard three of these matchless songsters singing at once; two not far away, and one in the distance.

But the greatest treat of the day's outing was not seen, or heard, as far as birds were concerned, on the hillside, but when I had gone down into the valley itself. There in a deciduous-fruit orchard I came upon a large flock of western robins. Only two or three stray robins had I seen during the winter, and to come upon so many of them and hear their familiar "Whe-wheat, tut, tut, tut, tut," sounding from several parts of the orchard, seemed almost too good to be true.

At my home, in Annandale Valley, I found another large flock of them, and on all sides sounded their song, "Whe-wheat, tut, tut, tut," the first syllable given in a high pitch, followed by a lower note, both given deliberately, the following "tuts" being given very rapidly. Sometimes only the "wheat," and sometimes the "tut" all by itself was given. These birds, like the birds of the orchard, were shy and illusive, not at all the friendly robins of the East, and I was obliged to admire them from a distance.

Besides the robins, there were many meadow larks in Annandale singing their evening matins from all sides. A large flock of bluebirds flew over, and about a row of blossoming eucalyptus trees, a flock of Audubon warblers foraged. Everything seemed to go in flocks in this charming little valley.

Though tired and footsore, I felt that my day had been a most profitable and satisfactory one.

HARRIET WILLIAMS MYERS.

Housekeeping.

A SCHEME THAT ASSURES LUXURY WITHOUT WORK OR WORRY.

From London Daily Mail.

IN Denmark the abolition of the domestic servant has been made possible for over a score of families by the opening of an entirely novel type of home, erected and inaugurated under the supervision of Count [illegible] in Copenhagen.

The distinguishing feature of this house is that within its walls, by the centralizing of the services required by the twenty-five families inhabiting it, and by the utilizing of every labor-saving device modern science and ingenuity have contrived, domestic work and worry are reduced to a minimum, while incidentally the cost of living is reduced as well.

If a woman is strong and well, has no children whom she wishes to devote her time, and does not need to be a bread-winner, she will probably not regard the ordinary household duties which in modern life fall to her share as irksome, but there are mothers who would far rather teach and train their children themselves than leave them to strangers while housekeeping duties are being attended to; there are women who must work for their daily bread, and there are women who are old and tired or in feeble health.

Then there are men, unmarried men, who would rather have a tiny home of their own, which would be automatically kept clean, than be subjected to the tyranny of even a well-meaning landlady—especially as the home would cost no more. In all these cases the advantages of Mr. Fick's system are manifestly great.

A flat, as everyone knows, is quite as private as a house, consequently there are in his building none of the drawbacks associated with common dining rooms, living rooms and compulsory association with others. A central domestic staff, whom, as they are employed by no other than servants, there will be less difficulty in managing, undertake the care of steps and stairs, which in the flats are cleaned periodically, at times fixed by the superintendent, by vacuum cleaner; boots and knives are cleaned by machinery, and it goes without saying that there are electric lights everywhere, telephones, speaking tubes and every conceivable modern convenience.

Washing is not undertaken by the general staff, but washing, drying, and ironing rooms are provided, and a certain number of washerwomen are attached to the building, whose services can be engaged. The work up after meals is done by the central staff, as are breakfast, and dinner services are supplied unless otherwise arranged.

The Copenhagen building is warmed through hot pipes, and the fires are situated in the basement. The kitchen is presided over by an experienced housekeeper who buys in provisions and stores, and all meals are prepared in the central kitchen, according to a daily menu within a fairly elastic margin of time. No one need ever dread dishes he dislikes being sent up to his flat, as he has only to inform the kitchen what he wishes to have.

Special dishes not on the menu, or special meals can be prepared by giving a day's notice, and as a tiny kitchen with gas stove, forms part of each flat; there is nothing to prevent preparation of food when inclination or circumstances render it desirable. Meals are sent up by electric lifts, communicating with the dining rooms.

The very little house work which is not thus provided for can easily be performed by the mistress of the flat, or she can pay to have it done by the general staff.

It is not only in Copenhagen that Mr. Fick's ideas have been welcomed. Three houses on a similar plan have already been erected in Sweden, and others are contemplated in Christiania, Goteborg (Sweden), Hamburg, Berlin, and Budapest, as well as three more in Denmark. But although it would be much easier to start the movement on a large international basis, from Copenhagen or the United States, Mr. Fick is for many reasons in favor of initiating it from London, which he regards as the natural starting-point for a far-reaching enterprise with an incalculably great future before it.

The financial arrangement he has found work well is a combination of shares, preference shares, and debentures, the tenants of flats being obliged to hold shares in the building to the amount of at least £50, on which interest is paid at the rate of 5 per cent., with an additional bonus of 1 per cent. on the general profits.

The general profits are not derived only from the rents of the flats, as they would be on an ordinary block of buildings, but owing to the tremendous economy effected by buying in on a large scale and by preparing all food in one central kitchen, there is also a considerable profit on the sale of food, even after deducting the cost of running the central kitchen.

The True Story of a Man With an Injured Mind.

By a Special Contributor.

Old Anthony Cassandra was a strangely eccentric man—a source of endless interest and droll entertainment to the neighboring orange growers, for his weird, uncanny freaks of mind were generally marked with a decided and peculiar originality.

He had come to California in the earlier days, an emaciated, hollow-eyed man, with tottering steps and gloomy countenance, but with sufficient means to purchase some acres of the old Paula Rancho which was being cut into numerous smaller holdings, where he engaged in the then somewhat problematical business of orange growing.

In a few years' time he had gained noticeably in flesh, improved wonderfully in health and spirits, and through several failures of crops and some successes, had made considerable substantial headway in his new venture.

But he never patterned after the experiences of others who had gone before him, preferring to conduct all details of his business strictly according to his own original ideas; and the freely-offered advice and suggestions of his well-meaning fellow-fruit-growers were as often seed fallen on stony ground.

If he wasn't able to steer his freight boat with his own sail and rudder, then let her sink! He had been brought up to believe that every kangaroo should learn to jump by the force of his own caudal appendage, and he was getting too old to ever go back on his early training. And some of these original proceedings of his were weird and startling in the extreme.

But he had not always been this uncanny and eccentric personage. A time there was when Anthony Cassandra was a prosperous, well-respected man in a large eastern city, the owner of a comfortable home and with his trouble blessed by a loving wife and helpmeet whom he worshiped with a passion such as few people in this old world ever feel.

A tiny baby girl had come to bring an additional ray of sunshine into his happy home, and it seemed that no human future was spanned by a more cloudless and promising sky than his.

But when the relentless clutch of pneumonia fastened upon his beloved companion and she was snatched from his life almost without warning, the iron sank deeply into his soul, and he became a remarkably changed man. Beside the form of his departed one he fell in a swoon, and it was with great difficulty brought back to consciousness. And when he arose from that death-like faint the expression of his eyes had forever changed, and his temperament appeared as though touched with frost.

For two years thereafter he went about his business in moody, unsociable silence. Then his health broke down, and a hollow, ominous cough brought forth the advice from his physician to seek a change of climate in southern California.

Acting upon this advice, he sold out his business, made such arrangements for the care and bringing up of his little daughter, and turning his back forever upon the familiar landmarks of his earlier home, struck out for the land of the setting sun.

Thus it came about that a certain orange grove in the first land of remarkable future development was made to flourish in spite of many serious drawbacks, and various lively bits of history recorded which could be traced directly to the door of old "Tony" Cassandra, the quaintest character in the whole region between Los Angeles and Fullerton.

Only a short drive from the latter place lay his well-kept orchard, the strip of green meadow land in the rear, the simple outbuildings, the comfortable ranch house embowered with pretty palms and magnolia trees, and the huge storage tank of natural gas which reared its ghostly form some distance back in the orange grove.

For about the first queer proceeding of this amateur orange grower to startle the community was to go poking and boring into the earth until he had hit a subterranean reservoir of natural gas, sufficient to furnish the means for cooking, fuel, and the lighting of his house and barn.

At this the easy-going tillers of the soil began to open their eyes and take notice of the new acquisition to their ranks, and several of them set to work energetically upon the same quest.

But all to no purpose. Not so much as a smell of gas could be unearthed anywhere else in the neighborhood. They finally gave up the work in disgust, with a good deal of sullen antipathy toward the newcomer, as though they felt that he was directly to blame for all their hard and fruitless labor in the matter.

They at length decided, however, to forgive the author of their wrongs, and in the course of time began to be quite friendly and neighborly with him. They fell to dropping often at his house and to giving him all sorts of good advice about caring for his orange and lemon trees, and other scientific points of the work. Also the effects of early and late frosts and the best recognized means of guarding against them.

But when they saw these various little free-will offerings of valuable advice coolly unheeded, they felt sorely insulted, and grimly decided then and there to let the queer old rascal proceed in his own blissful way, and go into bankruptcy soon as ever he pleased. It was none of their funeral, anyway.

One day another surprise took away the breath of the entire fruit-growing community. Old Cassandra hitched up his roaders, drove in to Los Angeles, and brought back with him a pretty and decidedly swell-looking young lady, whom it soon transpired was his daughter, who had just finished her schooling in the East and who had come to take charge of her father's home in the new and growing West.

This event created a decided flurry in a social way, and old Cassandra's place was immediately the center of a new and lively interest, especially to the eligible young men of the surrounding country.

Nellie Cassandra was a bright, intellectual girl of 19, with a pleasing, well-bred manner and a fund of book learning and generally useful knowledge quite remarkable to her new circle of acquaintance. In person she was irresistibly attractive, possessing a straight, plump figure of medium height, dark brown hair, bright blue eyes and a clear, rose-tinted complexion.

That the old man should have such a lovely and attractive daughter the busy-tongued gossips of the community regarded as another of his indescribable and uncanny doings. It was not according to the natural order of things.

Miss Cassandra possessed considerable talent for creating various interesting forms of social life, and in the course of a few months the place of her adoption had taken on an agreeable and surprising change in this regard.

And of course the natural result of such social intercourse must be chronicled. Nellie lost her heart to a certain young man from the adjacent village, and when their engagement was announced the news spread like wild fire through Fullerton and its environments.

The old gentleman had taken an unreasonable and bitter dislike to this friend of his daughter's, and when he became aware of the new condition of things he stormed and fumed around for several days, in a terrible fit of righteous indignation. There wasn't a man in the State good enough for his daughter—and for her to fall in love and engage herself to that reprehensible scoundrel was enough to drive the best father in the world to the whisky barrel for the balance of his days! If it were any other man on earth but Wellington Foster, the thoughts of it would be a little more endurable.

But Nellie only laughed the old man's wrath away with careless good nature, and in a short time had educated him up to the fact that he would have to make the best of it, willy-nilly. She intended to be a dutiful daughter in every sense of the word, but when it came to the question of a husband she would herself be the sole arbiter of the proceeding.

Wellington Foster was a young man of happy-go-lucky disposition, rather inclined to the sowing of wild oats—just the sort of man to win the heart of a carefully-brought-up girl of 19, who feels only too keenly the fact that she is forbidden any such agricultural pursuit by the conventions of society. But take him up one side and down the other, he was not a very bad sort of fellow, and he was desperately in love with Nellie, which in the present case was sufficient unto all requirements.

About this time the unprecedented cold snap of 1886, during which more than three-fourths of the orange crop was badly nipped or totally ruined, moved down from the northeast, and frost warnings were sent to all fruit-growing sections of California bidding the orchardists prepare in haste for a freezing temperature of unusual severity.

Fullerton growers were but ill-prepared to cope with this sudden and determined onslaught of the frost king, and losses approaching the dimensions of complete ruin stared many of them in the face.

Some of his sympathetic neighbors drove over to Cassandra's place and urged him to lose no time in making ready to smudge his trees. Somewhat to their surprise, they found the old fellow with a gang of men busily engaged in opening a strange-looking network of tiny ditches, not more than three inches deep, across his orchard from all sides. And from the direction of one of the outbuildings proceeded a peculiar sound like a plumber threading and storing away iron pipe.

"Smudging will do no good if present predictions prove true," the old man replied in response to his neighbors' urging," so you might as well save labor and expense in that direction."

"Neither will your measly little water ditches help you out any," was the scornful opinion of his visitors, scornfully expressed, as they surveyed the small trenches leading across the orchard. "If it gets too cold for smudging, all the water you can run into those little snake trails won't have any more effect than flies on a crocodile's back. But if you think you know more about it than anybody else, why, just go ahead. We ain't kicking."

And they drove on, leaving the old man at his busy and manifestly useless labor.

That night a light frost showed in exposed places, and all next day the thermometer went steadily downward except for a couple of hours at mid-day, when the sun was warmest. By nightfall the fruit growers saw that their worst fears were realized. Another sunrise would see the promising orange crop of that year almost if not utterly destroyed.

With gloomy faces and hopeless tones the orchardists called off their smudging operations and gathered in small groups here and there to discuss their sudden misfortune and the cheerless outlook ahead. And then another surprise in old Cassandra's direction was theirs.

In considerable wonder some one called attention to a weird sort of light which seemed to emanate from the region of the old fellow's orchard and to cast a dim ghostly halo above the tree tops.

What was old Cassandra up to now? Another of his unheard-of eccentricities, of course. Big money could be safely wagered on that! But the first thing was to hie themselves in his direction and find out what the strange light meant.

Once in view of the orchard, the meaning was quite clear. At intervals of about fifty feet throughout the entire grove bright, cheerful jets of flame were burning steadily, and not a trace of frost could be discerned within the radius of illumination! Cassandra had piped his orchard with natural gas from his storage tank, and the experiment was an unqualified success!

His crop of fruit, which would now be worth nearly its weight in gold, was saved.

And the others went home amazed, wondering if there was not some method at times in the old fellow's madness.

"That pipe work," said one of the men, in discussing the matter long afterward," must have cost him close to $400. But he saved his oranges, which went sky-high that season and netted him a good round sum away up in the thousands."

The following night the same scene was witnessed, but along toward morning a somewhat unexpected circumstance occurred. The jets of flame began to flicker and grow dim, and in the twilight of morning expired altogether! The old man's well of natural gas was exhausted, never to recuperate.

But its mission was accomplished, for that day the temperature went up beyond the danger point, and the cold snap slowly retreated northward and eastward whence it had come, leaving the soft mild air to hold sway once more over the destruction it had wrought.

Then old Cassandra did another surprising thing—this time far stranger than all the others.

He fitted up the place in good running order, presented his daughter with some very useful and substantial wedding tokens, made over jointly to her and Foster the entire property, freely and unconditionally, and on the day of her marriage shook the dust of California from his feet, and was seen no more in Fullerton.

At the time of his departure he was heard to remark that he hoped the property would prove the everlasting ruin of that scoundrelly son-in-law of his—and as for himself he was going East, back to God's country, where the roads weren't always full of dust and the ground always full of fleas.

And back East the old fellow went, not to his former home, but to a place in the Mississippi Valley country where he hoped to build up a small fortune for himself before the close of his earthly career.

But here reverses followed closely on his track, and away from the peaceful air of Southern California his health failed him exactly as it had years before.

Then in his mind's eye arose visions of the land of sunshine he had so foolishly left in the days of health and prosperity, and he determined to go back.

But his last dollar had dwindled to almost nothing, and he knew no one who cared enough about his welfare to loan him the price of a railway ticket. The relentless fact stared him in the face—he must stay where he was, or make the journey overland on foot!

Unhesitatingly he chose the latter, and with grim determination struck out upon the gigantic undertaking, weak, penniless and alone.

This was in early summer, and as he plodded wearily westward over the hot prairie country of the middle West, his courage failed him. The heat was intensifying with each succeeding day, and in his worn, emaciated condition, was becoming unendurable.

One afternoon the red dial of the sun glared down upon a flat, unbroken stretch of earth with unusual fierceness of temperature, and the lone traveler staggered painfully on beneath the blinding heat, his eyes red and almost sightless, his feet heavy and sore, and his throbbing temples causing him to groan frequently with excruciating pain.

And then, as the sun neared the western horizon, a black-funnel-shaped cloud loomed up against a copper-colored sky. Rapidly it increased in size, and with the deep, ominous roar of warring elements, the most destructive cyclone of modern times swept over the plain.

The pitiful figure of the solitary old man was directly in its pathway, and as he halted and glanced around at the heated prairie and upward at the darkening sky, he dimly realized that escape was impossible. But he felt no regret that this was so. Rather did he welcome the swiftly oncoming monster of doom with a sense of peaceful relief, as though he realized that his pain-tortured body and unsettled brain would soon be at rest forever.

Calmly and with the shadow of a smile upon his face he stood awaiting that roaring atmospheric giant—and when Anthony Cassandra bade adieu to the cares and troubles of this life he went up into the bowels of the whirlwind like a spinning top.

CLYDE SCOTT CHASE.

ASH PIT FOR EVERY HOUSE.

Among the objects that invariably attract the attention of tourists in Denver are the ash pits at every house. These are made necessary by the character of the coal commonly used for domestic purposes and by the high winds that prevail.

The ashes of the lignite coal so extensively burned hold the heat for an extraordinary length of time, remaining red-hot for many hours, or, if kept from the air, for days after passing through the grate bars.

It is evident that if these red-hot ashes were thrown out in back yards or vacant lots the high winds that sweep across the plains would scatter them broadcast, making them a constant menace to the eyes, and clothing of passers-by, as well as to inflammable property of every kind. Every house is therefore required by city ordinance to be provided with an ash pit, shaped like an old-fashioned bake oven, with small openings at the top, through which the ashes are thrown. Another opening in one side at the bottom permits their removal when the pit is full.—[Kansas City Times.

Alexander approached jauntily. That was his way. He had all sorts of nerve.

"Diogenes, old buck," quoth he, "how much will you take to be my guide, philosopher, and friend?"

"Kindly skidoo!" snarled Diogenes. "I've been a guyed philosopher too long to be anybody's friend. Will you chase yourself out of my light, or shall I call an officer?" And that was all there was to it.—[Puck.

[illegible] composed a singularly fascinating American [illegible].

[illegible] believed that each Chinatown household had [illegible] sort of preparation for its favorite festival. The wom- [illegible] cleaned house and nailed upon the lintels the [illegible] emblems of peacock feathers and tinsel. [illegible] cooks and their helpers had the air of [illegible] and were tolerated, for they had been over- [illegible] for a fortnight, and many, many were the [illegible] family dinners and tong banquets. At [illegible], therefore, all Chinatown was in holiday [illegible] (redolent of both sandalwood and mothballs) [illegible] effort to feast and be merry and to interpret all happenings as auguries of a year of prosperity and of peace.

With so much tangible joy on every hand, the existence of sorrow was to be doubted. And yet, all that afternoon, there might have been seen upon a crimson balcony, the second story balcony of a certain building in the very heart of Chinatown, an elderly gentleman in a mink-faced tunic, who held a black fan before his eyes. He stood alone, solitary. His countenance was as admirably passionless as that of the high gods, but his attitude was of extremest dejection, and, looking closely, the lines of his face revealed a variety of suffering in the presence of which the wise is dumb. It was Kim Sang Wo.

Kim Sang Wo who did not hold himself apart from the holiday throng because he was so Americanized that he did not believe in the antiquated idiocy of festivals. And he was not in the least degree a misanthrope. For years, all Chinatown had known him as an exceptionally amiable gentleman, over-generous, perhaps, yet one who knew each of The Proprieties and who well understood the fine art of living. It was he who, only twelve brief moons before, had been the leader of all the extravagant revelry at the opening of the new Chinese Masonic Temple. It was he who always had been the treasurer of the Chinese Fiesta Fund, the fund that had made it possible for all Los Angeles and two Presidents of the United States to see processions not made up entirely of gilded pasteboard, cheesecloth, fire-engines and citizens in carriages! In these splendid processions of his arrangement (with the truly regal accompaniment of scores of footmen in silken robes of the purest colors, with whirling banners of gold embroidery, with curious musicianers' chariots and superlatively beautiful flags,) a great dragon had been made to writhe his gorgeous course through the city's commonplace streets, a dragon of the most brilliant and enchanting ugliness! The enormous expense attendant upon such a pageant had not justified the merchants of Chinatown, and some there were who attached the blame to the originator of the scheme. But to Kim Sang Wo, a loyal citizen of Los Angeles, the trouble and expenditure had seemed worth while.

The truth about Kim Sang Wo, standing alone upon his balcony, was that only three moons before this festival of the new year he had been a stranger to most of the Seven Emotions, living a blameless life of industry and content. And then one day, one evil day appointed by the lesser gods, the old astrologer on the street corner had called out to him and so loudly that all men heard: "O Illustrious Person, known of men as Kim Sang Wo! I say unto thee, set thine affairs in order, for the planets reveal that thou dost rapidly approach The Yellow Springs. Forget not these my words." And immediately there had followed a great sound, quite like the jingling of copper pans! Kim Sang Wo, suddenly as cold as jade, hoped the ominous sound originated in the kitchen of a near-by cook-shop, but his heart told him it was the dread voice of the sky-dragon.!

His four companions upon that evil day (light-minded and Americanized young men) laughed immoderately at the words of the soothsayer, but in the soul of Kim Sang Wo there was no mirth.

Nevertheless, and without pausing, he made reply: "O Eminent Reader of The Future! Others not wholly unversed in the lore of the stars have discerned that this quite indifferent person is to live upon earth as long as The God of Longevity himself!" And, as he and his friends passed unconcernedly on (they formed an imposing procession, each in his long ceremonial robe of heliotrope silk,) the idlers of the street corner had snickered derisively at Dong Li, the soothsayer. But that stout-hearted and venerable person, having attracted as customers two ranch laborers, pulled his thin beard with renewed complacence and threw a look of contempt at his stupidly industrious neighbors, the cobbler and the mender of pipes.

Soon after this (for a truth,) it came to pass that Kim Sang Wo fell ill of The Hot Sickness and, after many weeks, there came to him a great and unaccountable weakness of the eyes, which the most eminent Chinese physicians and the most expert American occulists could not cure, although their experiments were both many and costly. This calamity would have been a reminder of the prophecy of the old astrologer, had a reminder been needed.

And so, on this New Year's evening, while all his friends were wishing each other New Joy and Get Rich, Kim Sang Wo stood apart from them, unwanted, forgotten, looking The Three Precious Ones in the face and pondering the hateful words of the American oculist who, the day previously and with abruptness, had told him that within six months he would be wholly and incurably blind! Was a man like Kim Sang Wo, suddenly reduced to the ignominy of an idle spectator, to sit disregarded in the dark for a myriad year-long hours, irrationally cheerful, waiting only for death? Blindness! Total blindness! A destiny so ill-regulated was surely more harsh than death by the teeth of wild beasts. It has ever been that the affliction of the moment can make a man forget all his blessings and even a lifetime of pleasure.

To have been a leader of one's fellows in a strange land and then by them to be ignored or forgotten is the most pitiable thing and bitter, even when one has eyes to tell the night from the day! All that lonely afternoon on the crimson balcony, above a merry-making and self-centered crowd, all the happinesses of Kim Sang Wo's life were a little memory as brief as a bubble, as summer lightning! They were no solace then.

But, as he meditated, he clearly perceived that life in this world was an evil gift to mankind, since all men must know terror and sorrow. And it was an overwhelming pity that finally crowded out the bitterness in his heart, a pity for the young and inexperienced many who were still enamored of a life be at last understood.

As the shadows deepened, he remained quite motionless but with an ear, quickened by loneliness, intent upon all the sounds of the street and of his dwelling place. The wife of his neighbor was singing an ancient song, The Wind Through The Pines; and most depressingly. Her children were shrill over a game of dominoes. From below there came the disturbant voices and laughter of a merchant friend and his American callers, each shouting his questions and his criticisms at the host, as Americans regard all foreigners deaf. On the floor above, a ten-hour feast was about to begin, and it was proclaimed to a large neighborhood by the plaintive violins, the joy-compelling cymbals and the odors of roasted fowls and long-cooked broths. That particular feast had been talked of for weeks. It was given by the president of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce to the mighty men of three Chinatowns, and yet Kim Sang Wo had received no red note of invitation.

Who, if he be among the discreet, bids a deformity to the house of feasting? Kim Sang Wo stood alone at that crucial hour of his life and was a man wholly disillusioned but calm. Pain twisted about behind his eyes like hot and saw-edged irons, but was such pain more unendurable than the neglect of friends or the coming of a night, which was to him perpetual?

The light of day faded at last, and a violet darkness fell over Chinatown. It grew chill and Kim Sang Wo closed his fan and looked upward for the evening star. And vainly. He saw nothing, not even the near-by moon of an electric light. Then as the joy-compelling cymbals clashed in the banquet-hall above him, he withdrew from the joy-colored balcony to his sleeping room.

It was long after the midday following the memorable banquet given by the president of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce to the notables of three Chinatowns that, sleepily scanning their morning papers, the English-reading Chinese saw a paragraph that entirely discomposed all their New Year assurances of good-luck and tranquility. It read:

"Prominent Chinaman Kicks The Bucket."

"Suffering great pain from inflamation of the eyes and fearing total blindness, a prominent and highly-respected Chinaman, Kim Sang Wo, swallowed a vial of strychnine last night, and ended his pain by death. The deed was committed in his handsomely furnished rooms in Nigger Alley. Deceased was about forty years old and one of the progressive spirits of the local Chinatown. The value of his estate is estimated at about $10,000."

So then everybody who was anybody of repute was constrained to put aside, for an hour, the New Year games and feastings, and to lament the sudden passing of Kim Sang Wo.

But, after that, the American undertaker came and carried him away from the interrupted and impatient merry-makers who, with cold, dry eyes, immediately drank deep, to forget a New Year event of such evil omen to all who knew him.

OLIVE PERCIVAL.

THE TOILETS OF ANTS.

"Ants have fine and coarse combs, sponges, hair brushes, and soap. They are remarkably clean."

The speaker was a nature student. He bent over the artificial ants' nest, or formicary, that stood on his table under glass.

"Watch this lady making her toilet," he said. "She won't mind."

The little black ant seemed to be carefully tying and untying knots in herself. The small black body twisted and turned. The tough little black limbs darted through the air.

"That is her fine-tooth comb she is using now," explained the student. "It is affixed to the tibia of the foreleg. It has a short handle, a stiff back, and 65 fine teeth. Nothing can escape it.

"Now she is sponging her back. Yes, the tongue is her sponge, the flat surface of the tongue. The tongue's edges are her brush. They are equipped with hemispherical bosses—short, stiff, blunt bristles. See her brushing her left foreleg with it. Doesn't it work admirably?

"Now she is combing the hairy underpart of her body with her coarse comb. It is attached to the tarsus, and has forty-five coarse teeth—an excellent instrument for rough work.

"She is giving her legs a good soap bath now. She draws them, you see, through her mandibles, or upper jaws. The mandibles are serrated, and they secrete a fluid that is quite like soapsuds, a superb toilet lotion which cleanses the skin and makes the hair brilliant and supple.

"Brushes, combs, toilet lotions, sponges and soap—nature has given them all to the little black ant."

COASTING 87 MILES AN HOUR.

The finest coasting hill in the world is at St. Moritz, in Switzerland. The hill is a mile long, and to coast down it takes, on an average, 67 seconds.

The Cresta Course, as it is called, is iced, and runs between snow banks. Its turns are dangerous, and only skilled coasters venture on it. They use the American flat toboggan, lying on the stomach, and steering not with the feet, but with lifts and jerks of the body.

A few seconds from the start on this course, the coaster is going at a speed of twenty miles an hour. This speed soon increases to forty miles. Faster and faster he flies, swooping down the precipitous Church Leap at the speed of an express train, and then on to the long, straight Shuttlecock run. To fifty, to sixty, to seventy, to eighty miles an hour the pace grows, till it is like the flight of the swiftest bird through a blinding blur of snow. Yet the speed still increases, and at the end of the Shuttlecock, eighty-seven miles an hour is registered.

These Cresta Course speeds are not problematical. They are the accurate timings of an electric clock.

UNIQUE EXPERIENCES OF SOME OF THE PIONEERS.

From a Special Correspondent.

MANILA (P. I.)—Unknown to most people in the United States hundreds of Americans have cast their lot in the Philippines. They have settled throughout the archipelago, penetrating even the most remote districts, among head-hunters, tree-dwellers, and all the strange, wild tribes that are found in the interior of the archipelago. There is hardly a town of any size in the Philippines in which there are not Americans that work near by. These settlers of the islands are probably the greatest leaven the Filipinos could obtain to bring them to the use of more modern methods in agriculture and industries, and to raise their standard of living.

"It is just this way," said a young American hemp planter whom I met down in Mindanao, "You hear a lot of talk in the United States from those fellows who sit around in the cities holding government jobs and are dissatisfied, while you never hear much from the settlers who see a chance of making money here and go out into the provinces and do a man's work and take advantage of the resources of the country." Most of the American pioneers in the Philippines are former members of the volunteers, regular army members, or former employés of the civil government, or merchants or trades people who came out to do business in Manila when the large standing army was quartered there. Besides individuals, there are a number of large companies which have entered the islands to go into mining, timber, railroads and agriculture. Construction on the railroads has already commenced and fifty engineers, representing one of the construction companies, arrived in Manila early last June.

Let's see who these Americans are and what they are doing, and where they are located. Their experiences will tell more about the Philippines than extensive tomes and unending opinion on the islands.

Hemp Ranches in Mindinao.

Down at Davao, in Mindanao, there are at least fifty Americans who have started up hemp ranches largely under the encouragement of Gen. Leonard Wood. An industry that has created a great deal of excitement and in which many Americans are engaging, is hemp raising. It does not require the large capital necessary to go into sugar or tobacco, and is peculiarly suited to a young American of moderate means. German, English, Spanish, Assyrians and Filipinos are also taking up hemp. Capt. J. L. Burchfield came to Davao in December, 1899. He was fascinated with the country. He was mustered out of the service by special permission and immediately settled down to wrest a fortune from the wilderness. Since going to Mindanao his material wealth has increased tenfold. He owns a magnificent plantation, has a splendid home in the town of Davao, and during the whole time he says he has enjoyed as much health and comfort as he has during any former period of his life. At the present time he is shipping eighty piculs, or packages, of hemp a month, worth about $12 gold per picul. At the end of last year's harvest the shipments from his plantation up to date did not only pay for the expenses of the establishment but had put him on velvet to the tune of about $25,000 gold. Capt. Burchfield's wife joined him in 1901. A number of other American ladies have joined their husbands in that region, and they say they enjoy such material comfort that they no longer feel like pioneers. They have a large retinue of servants at little expense, so that the servant-girl question is forever disposed of.

The Jungle Cleared.

Another American down in that region who has had a unique experience is Frank C. Cook, president of the Davao Planters Association. He owns a plantation about forty-five miles south of Davao. When he first went there several years ago it was not a plantation, however, but a jungle in the midst of a lovely little tropic valley. The people living thereabouts were a tribe of wild and timid savages called Bogobos. They warred with each other, lived practically upon roots and the food of the chase, and would flee into the jungle the moment they saw Mr. Cook. At first he found it difficult to get into communication with these wild people, but by living there alone and unprotected he won their confidence. He gave them medicine when they were sick, advised them in their tribal relations, and gradually induced them to settle about him. A village street was laid out, shade trees were planted and houses were built for the wild people. Now Mr. Cook has about 2000 people living on his plantation and he can put a large force at work any time he wants to. While they always go armed, as is the custom in the country, they have never offered to injure any white man or never committed any serious offense among themselves.

There are dozens of men who have had experiences just like that of Mr. Cook. One of them is John Orr of Dalupaon. He has a timber cutting, and when he went to the forest district in Luzon he found the people living in trees and eating fish that were cast up on the beach. Now they are civilized, wear good clothes and ... and even use American sewing machines. ... all, they are efficient workers. Not far from Mr. Wolfson's office is located the large printing establishment and store of E. C. McCollough Company, the largest private establishment of the kind in the Orient. Mr. McCollough has made all of his money during the last few years, and, it is said, can write his check for over $500,000 gold. He is interested in a great many profitable planting operations throughout the islands. Col. W. H. Anderson, just across the street from McCollough's, is a West Point graduate who found the possibilities in the Philippines so alluring that he left the army to take up civil life. He knows the Philippines like a book, having served with great distinction during the insurrection, and his canned goods can be found in almost every tienda, or store in the Philippines.

Salary Equal to the President's.

An American in the Philippines who is said by the Manila newspapers to be getting a salary equal to that of the President of the United States, is Richard Laffin, manager and vice-president of the Manila Street Railway Company. Mr. Laffin is not forty years of age. When he first came to the Philippines to launch his enterprise people laughed at the idea of a street railway in Manila. It would be impossible, they said, to secure satisfactory labor from the Filipinos, and they claimed the road would not be patronized. After a little more than one year of operation, although less than $4,000,000 was invested, the road is capitalized at $8,000,000, on which it is paying generous interest. Five million dollars' worth of bonds were sold, and about $3,500,000 worth of stock, which is now 71.

A great many people will be surprised to learn that a lot of mining is being done in the Philippines. It is chiefly on the Island of Masbate, where enormous quantities of low and moderate grade placer ore are found. There are, however, fair deposits of gold-bearing quartz in the Benguet region of Luzon which could be very profitably worked were the region more accessible. On the island of Basilan and Mindanao are found enormous deposits of coal which have from 75 to 90 per cent. of the steam efficiency of the best Australian coal. The government will operate the Basilan coal mines for use in the navy. The great Mindanao coal fields are almost unknown and unexplored.

Gold Mining Companies.

One of the largest mining companies is the Philippine Mining Company, which has a gold dredge on the island of Masbate. This company has three large dredgers of the Oroville type on the ground; two of them arrived only last April. All told, they represent an expenditure of $325,000 gold. F H. Kimball, the engineer in charge, is working 1200 yards of gravel per day, averaging 43c gold per yard. Through buying deeds and titles, this company has secured about four hundred acres of land.

Another concern, the Oriental and Masbate Mining Company, composed of Pittsburgh men, is working in placer gold on the same island. One dredger now working has cut them $110,000 gold. This company has 410 acres of gold dredger land.

The Philippine American Company has expended about $200,000 gold and has been working on their claims about four and a half years. They are the pioneers in the field. The managers seem confident that they will pay well, for they say they have never drawn a cent of profit. They have thirteen quartz and 800 acres of placer ground. A five-stamp mill is running on the property and a forty-stamp mill has been ordered. The ore is treated with a free-milling and amalgamating process, and runs $11.40 a ton. In a recent twenty-four-day's-run, the mill turned out $3186 gold. This company pays its laborers 30c gold a day and furnishes rice.

Then there is the Cogran Mining Company, which has a ten-stamp mill. The Philippine Mining, Power and Development Company, with four quartz claims, will soon build a ten-stamp mill. The Gold Bug Mining Company has ordered, it is said, a ten-stamp mill, and two Huntington roller mills. The Buena Vista Company has erected a twenty-stamp mill. There are about thirty prospectors in the field.

Outside of the government there have been few agencies to bring agricultural implements on a large scale to the Philippines. The two largest planting companies are the International Harvester Company, which has invested something like $5,000,000 in hemp. This company has a large hemp ranch on the island of Cebu. It has made many expensive experiments in order to strip hemp by machinery, and the prospect is now that such a machine will be speedily put upon the market. The other large private concern is the Philippine Plantation Company, which has introduced traction engines and great quantities of other machinery to work a big tobacco and sugar ranch in the Cagayan Valley of northern Luzon. This company has skilled superintendents, and its operations will be watched with a great deal of interest in the Philippines, for despite all the discussions about sugar and tobacco raising in the archipelago, and the fear of the free entrance of these products into the United States, it is the pioneer and only American company of any size in the Philippines to engage in this industry. A number of German, Spanish, Chinese and Filipino concerns are successfully operating, though with generally out of date methods.

A section which is attracting a lot of attention in Manila is the famous Cotabato Valley in Mindanao. From the forests around this valley as much as 400,000 pounds of gutta percha, a gum of great value in insulating marine cables, has been exported by Chinese traders in a single year. It is worth in Singapore $2.35 American currency per pound. The forests abound with gutta percha, and the rubber vine, 200 feet long, known as the Parameria, which grows on the tops of the tallest trees. The vine is ground up in mills just like sugar cane and over four per cent. of its entire weight is the purest and most valuable rubber. Gen. Wood compares the Cotabato Valley to the famous Saigon Valley in China.

"Best Place on Earth."

Not long ago Harold M. Pitt, a member of the American Chamber of Commerce of Manila, created a thunderous sensation throughout the archipelago by stating in an interview in the Manila American that, "the Philippines is the best place on earth."

And he meant it, too.

So optimistic a statement from a sober business man, not speaking for political effect, will be amazing to many Americans who have heard only discouraging stories from the islands. In short, to those who have heard only ill of the Philippines, it may sound like a horrible whopper. Few people whose ideas of the archipelago are based on the trying experiences of our soldiers and pioneers in "the days of the Empire," that is, the period preceding the civil administration, will believe such an extremely optimistic expression to be sincere. Yet there are thousands of busy Americans at work throughout the archipelago who are satisfied and content to cast their lot here for life and who are only too glad to say a good word for the Philippines every chance they get. Mr. Pitt is the first American, so far known, publicly to assert that "the Philippines is the best place on earth, bar none." But his far-flung optimism met with an applause from all classes that still reverbrates throughout the archipelago from Mount Apo to Benguet. There's a new spirit in the Philippines today. It is a reflection of the confident feeling inspired among all commercial men of the islands, by some amazing industrial enterprises that have been begun.

Just now the Philippine Islands and the Filipino people need a new interpreter. Now that there is peace in the islands and normal conditions of living in more sanitary surroundings have obtained, Americans find that the Philippines are not unhealthy. Indeed, they possess, it is asserted, the finest tropical climate in the world. The death rate for Americans is only eleven per thousand, as compared with 17.4 in the United States. Though this small death rate is, in part, largely accounted for by the fact that practically all the Americans who have come over here are adults, yet it is an amazing commentary on health conditions in the islands under a hygienic regimé. The Filipino people need a new interpreter by reason of the adaptable manner in which they are laying hold of a new scheme of life. The profound influence of the present industrial awakening upon so assimilative a people as the Filipinos can scarcely be overestimated. They belong to the Malay stock, which is one of the oldest families of the human race of which we know. Possessing a natural liking for commerce and barter, they have survived because of their adaptability. The most highly developed Malay branches, as, for instance, the Filipino Tagalogs, had attained a well-defined civilization long before the advent of the Dutch and Spanish. The civilization which they are assuming, therefore, while yet a more modern garment is woven out of the same fundaments, the basic habit of production, barter and trade to which these people have for centuries been accustomed.

Great Opportunities.

The Philippines today offer as great as, or greater opportunities for the development of trade and commerce, the investment of capital and the engagement of enterprise than any other Latin-American or Oriental country. The reason is obvious. Americans have penetrated the archipelago and responsible American importers are to be found in every port pushing their wares. In most other places in the Orient and in South America, importers who handle exclusively American goods are scarcer than "hens" teeth. The people are under an American government and are in daily association with Americans, so they are learning to prefer our wares to all others and they set them up as standards. Thus the competition which American goods meet with elsewhere is reduced to a minimum. The Philippines is the point of least resistance, the wedge, as it were, whereby we may enter the stupendous trade of the vast, tropical Orient, which comprises one-fifth of the earth's land surface and over one-half its population. Saving the Philippines you may search in vain in the tropical East, from Cairo to Sandaken, for a firm that is pushing American goods, outside the branch houses of Manila firms. The archipelago is not only the single tropical or Oriental region in which American business interests have gained a foothold and paved the way for rapid growth, but a tremendous commercial development seems assured in the next half dozen years by reason of extensive railroad building, large undertakings by the Philippine government and generous investment of foreign capital.

If a man will live in the Philippines as he should live in the tropics, he will have no trouble in keeping his health and his vigor. The Spanish have lived here for generations with unimpaired activity. But they live carefully. Not all Americans do. I know of a big, stout six-foot fellow of the Coast in the Geodetic Survey. He said that he, for his part, would not pay attention to all the nonsensical ideas that we followed in regard to drinking the water; but would drink out of any old stream that he came to. In eight months he was dead. I know another man, old Governor Sanz of Romblon Island, who has lived in the Philippines for fifty-two years and has only been back for six months since he came as a young man from Madrid; and he has never had a week's sickness in his life. He has always taken care to observe the rules of the tropics, and consequently he enjoys excellent health. There is really nothing the matter with the climate of the Philippines, provided a man observes the rules of hygiene that are followed by other dwellers in the tropics. Over in India the English have this down to a science. I know a Yankee who came to Manila some time ago. He was a thin, wiry, nervous, industrious fellow, and he said, "I will wipe 'Mañana' off the map; there won't be such a word as 'tomorrow' in any work that I am doing." In two weeks he was flat on his back, and he stayed there for a long time. The American who butts up against the inertia of the Orient is ramming his head against a stone wall. He may lead people to do things, but he cannot drive them; and, by appearing to be leisurely and to take his time, by pulling strings and cleverly arranging, he will hurry matters through a great deal faster than if he tries the typical Yankee hustle in the Orient. It would seem that hustle as we know it cannot succeed. An immense amount of work can be done, but not by our methods.

Must Know the Natives.

Lots of Americans who come over here get infinitely disgusted with the condition of things in general. They do not like the people and do not want to like them. The trouble is that they do not know them. They do not like the Philippine Islands, and the trouble is that they do not know the Philippines, and perhaps only know Manila, which, with its feverish excitement, no more represents the Philippine Islands than Washington represents the United States. When one travels through the Philippines, he finds that the native is a mighty pleasant fellow. The average native is a contented, hospitable, kindly, agricultural man. Many a day have I come, scrubby-bearded and dirty, to a barrio (suburb,) and have had set before me the finest fowls of mine host; yet, when I offered to pay for my entertainment, I would be told: "No, Señor, usted es muy amigo mio," I was his friend and he would accept no money. In months of travel I have not carried a revolver on my person, and do not expect to do so during my stay in the islands. Many writers exaggerate the dangers of traveling in the interior of the Philippines. A. Henry Savage Landor, who wrote a book on Thibet that brought him fame, wrote also a volume on the Philippines, entitled "The Gems of the East," which was published last year by Harper Brothers. Mr. Landor has a brilliant imagination, and the only true thing that I have found in his book is that the canned tomatoes sold in the Philippines are like dish-water soup. I went all through the Igorrote country, all through Southern Luzon, and through many of the other islands, covering many of the trails which Mr. Landor covered, and going even farther than Mr. Landor, penetrating places where, so far as is now known, no one had ever ventured. But I have met no dangers of any sort, nor have I ever been threatened with any. Mr. Landor records death in a thousand forms and hears the rustling of the death angel's wings as it hovers near. I have not time, nor has my reader, to allow me to pick Landor to pieces. All this picturesque writing is balderdash.

The average investigator who visits the Philippines takes in some of the large coast ports, Manila, Iloilo, Cebu and Zamboanga, with generally a ride on the railroad from Manila to Dagupan. Some of them, however, have never even gone outside of Manila. "Why do I need to travel in the Philippines?" asked a distinguished correspondent of the Chicago newspapers. "I can get all the data I want right here in Manila." The truth is, few of our public men, regardless of their politics, have had a chance to really know and appreciate the islands or their people. The question of the Philippines today is not a question of political administration so much as it is of agricultural development. The ponderous settlement of the Philippine problems on paper is largely the result of looking through the wrong end of the microscope and seeing everything inverted. Many of the business men who have lived in the Philippines ten, twenty, or thirty years, including a lot of Englishmen and Germans and Spaniards, and a whole lot of Americans who have been in the Philippines since the days of the empire or the early days of American occupation, believe that after all there are no serious problems in the islands; but that these are merely phases of growth such as might present themselves in any country following war times. They believe that Congress might do a great deal by proclaiming a definite policy to help the Philippines. But, aside from the action of Congress, whether we as a people ignore these problems or whether we give our whole attention to settling them, it will not make any difference, for they will settle themselves gradually as the capital of the world seeks a rich country where it can raise more sugar, more hemp, more tobacco, and more of the common necessaries of life for which there is an increasing demand everywhere; and as the people responding to this prosperity adopt a better standard of living.

No Great Hardships.

There are no terrible hardships in the Philippines for a common-sense man. How about the planters in the Philippines? you ask. Don't they undergo awful hardships? This all depends upon the planter. I know a Scotchman who has been for fourteen years in the islands, and has had but two days of sickness. A man should not drink intoxicants in the tropics yet many do it and keep his health. A while ago I was on a steam launch off the Island of Burias, along the coast of Southern Luzon. A Scotch engineer, who is well-known in Manila and quite a drinker, got out of his liquor. About the second day he began to get cross, nervous, and generally out of tune. In the distance we saw black smoke on the horizon. Soon we discovered that it was a liner from Australia. The Scotchman put a flag up at half-mast, the liner hove to. "What do you want?" cried the captain. "Have ye any liqour aboard?" said the Scotchman. "Good enough," said the captain, "it must be MacKenzie; "I will be sending you some gin right away." He lowered a boat, sent over a jug of gin, and soon the liner was away low down on the horizon.

A lot of people think that the Philippines are a mass of swamps and jungles. This is a great mistake.

Benito.

AN INCIDENT OF MISSION HISTORY IN EARLY CALIFORNIA.

By a Special Contributor.

BENITO heard it all very plainly as he lay dozing the pleasant noontide away in the sunshine, against the adobe wall of one of the huts of the Indian quarter of the Mission Santa Ynez.

"Why wait until tomorrow? Why not kill the young padre now, while he is sleeping off the early afternoon in his cell? The other one is away, which will make it easier today; for he will return for early Sunday mass tomorrow. Then we shall have done our job, and be free to go up to Purisima in the night and help them cut open their dogs of Christian priests on the day appointed for the general uprising, which is tomorrow, brothers.

This he heard, and listened again.

"True, why not?" spoke up another voice in the hut, after a moment's dead silence; and then, "True, why not?" came from voice after voice, until it grew into a chorus, low and cautious, yet distinctly audible outside the closed panels of the low, deep-set window recess.

Benito started up from his doze, and a sudden pallor showed even through his shiny, brown-black complexion. He knew each voice. The first that had spoken—the one that had proposed immediate murder—was that of his own uncle, big, lowering, square-faced Augusto, the head native blacksmith of the mission, who had become a skilled iron worker under the teaching of Father Francisco Uria; and the second was from the throat of lean Juan Sancho, native foreman of the shepherds, and so on, as Benito swiftly identified in his mind each member of that secret, inyisible council of his people.

So they were going to kill dear, kind, strong Father Francisco, teacher of all pleasant and useful things, from blacksmithing to music? And tomorrow there was to be a general uprising of the Indians throughout the southern missions, to kill other good padre teachers?

Ah, now Benito began to understand the secret things he had overheard off and on of late, and the mysterious signs he had seen exchanged, and the concealed arrival and departure of an almost naked messenger in the night, a week before.

The boy allowed his body to slip down from where his head and shoulders leaned against the wall, and stretched himself prone on his back, an arm across his face to shade his eyes from the blue glare of the sky. He was afraid of being seen, and was less conspicuous this way, stretched out as still as a log. What should he do?

He loved the thoughtful yet sturdy, steady-eyed young Castilian, Father Francisco, whose strong face, relentless in outward outline, showed the soul-gentleness of a good woman beneath. How hard it would be to think of him dead! But if he, Benito, should make an indiscreet movement now; if any of the scores of Indians who were scattered about the wide mission compound at this moment should see him steal from the council hut to the padre's cell behind the cloister arches, thenceforth his life would not be worth a cotton shirt—for it would not last half so long. He understood now, with his native intuition, that every Indian was in the bloody secret.

Besides, could he betray his own people—his own relatives, even?

Benito, born just twelve years before, in this same thatched adobe hut, whose sunlit southern wall reflected its genial warmth upon him now—it being February, when the sunshine is more goodly than the shade—was page to Father Francisco. The good padre had almost raised him from the time he was old enough to learn to read Spanish, letter by letter, from the crude parchments in the mission library; and after the spelling lessons came the lessons in the sweet singing that the bit of an Indian boy loved so passionately, and learned to do so well. Outside of lesson hours the little fellow—an orphan—was always at the missionary's side as messenger, and generally handy appendage; save only at just this time of day, when the whole establishment, Indian converts and missionaries alike, enjoyed a siesta, or rest, from the time the simple dinner was finished, about an hour before noon, until the great bell rang for work again at 2 o'clock. At this siesta time Benito always left his beloved Father Francisco to pray and sleep in peace in his bit of a cell next to the church, and after kissing the missionary's hand in parting salute, made his way across the compound to doze away the still noon against some wall in the Indian quarter.

Again Benito started up, almost to his feet this time. Crouching on his haunches, he trembled between two fears. He could hear the muffled sounds of preparations now among the conspirators inside the hut, as they discarded the cotton shirts and trousers in which they had been clothed at the mission, and painted and decked their naked bodies in their original savage style. A low ominous chant—the death chant—came faintly to Benito's straining ears. Harder and harder the boy struggled between his contending impulses. The chant, the mystery of conspiracy, the prospect of stealthy, easy murder and fight to the wild freedom of the native hills, awed, fascinated, fired the inherited savagery of the still primitive lad, so that the impulse to leap in with the other Indians and draw alien blood was almost irresistible for a moment. Often had he heard the elders among his people who were confined in the mission fold say that it would be good beyond all measure—indeed, like a draught from a bubbling mountain spring to a thirst-wracked desert traveler—to be naked and free under the oaks of yonder hills again. Benito himself did not know the feel of this wild freedom, untrammeled by either work or prayers, by experience, for he had been born in the shadow of the mission; but he felt the unrest of its charm vaguely in his bones when the elders, grumbling, told of it. And why, after all, should he not try it, along with the rest of his kind—forever free from the cowled Spaniards, masters of endless prayers and toil?

Thus was Benito's mind inflamed for a moment; but the next, a vision of the calm, commanding face of Father Francisco rose in the place of the primitive instincts; the kind teacher's melodious voice, singing one of those sweet, sacred songs of the church, seemed to drift like an echo in his ears, and the childish tongue involuntarily began to hum the verses and repeat the prayers it had learned at the quiet padre's knee.

"No, I will warn him," muttered Benito, in Spanish, revolting even from the language of his people under the sudden revulsion that had overwhelmed all the savagery in his soul at the agonizing thought of seeing the red blood of Father Francisco spilled on the tiling of that sacred cell.

He was onto his feet this time, vowed to save his benefactor at any cost. Fear still assailed him, for he was only a child, but valiantly he wrung its neck and threw it aside. In another moment he would have been crouching low in the shadow of the wall of the inner compound, slipping cautiously along toward the main mission building and the missionary's cell.

But at that instant the panels of the low, deep-set window place at his back parted and big Augusto, hideous and shining in his naked regalia, stepped stealthily out, silently followed by the dozen other Indians who had formed the secret council. All were bedecked alike for war, and each carried a short club, a bow and a quiver of arrows.

Benito felt the gripping hand of his uncle close around his slender throat before he could draw another breath.

The Indian turned to his followers and asked: "What say you; shall I snap his neck, or was he asleep?"

The rest shrugged their shoulders indifferently.

"He is but a simple little fool," remarked one; let him loose and hear what he will say."

The heavy hand was removed from Benito's throat. With admirable calmness the boy feigned extreme sleepiness; stretched his arms above his head, rubbed his eyes, and, looking in a surprised way at the painted apparitions, said: "I was asleep. What's the matter, are you going to have a dance today?"

"Yes, thou sleepy-head, we are going to have a little fiesta today, and mind thou comest not too near the fun," answered Augusto, grimly, and slipped off with his followers along the rear wall toward another hut.

Benito knew instinctively that Augusto's band, numerous as they were, would not dare attack even a single able-bodied white man without further fortifying their spirits with pow-wows and chants. They would steal from hut to hut, inflaming the already half-prepared inmates with the prospects of quick murder with little risk, and adding recruits to their party as they proceeded. So there would be time enough to reach Father Francisco's cell, way over there in the low cloistered, red-tiled building, by following the shadow of the compound wall all the way round, back of the church and the graveyard—a half mile, perhaps, from where Benito now stood—and warn the dear man from the little prison-like grating in the rear wall of his cell which Benito knew he could reach by digging his bare toes into the cracks between the adobe bricks and making a jump for the iron bars.

Benito stripped himself of his white cotton shirt and trousers, so that his movements would be less conspicuous under the bright light of mid-day, and with only a breech clout about his loins, set out along the base of the high mud wall like a dark gray cat hugging cover.

Benito missed his hold on the iron grating at the first jump and slipped to the ground, but the second time he pulled his lean, graceful body up to the deep sill, where he could crouch with security.

Yes, there was Father Francisco, the man he loved, the strong face, true, kindly, commanding, just as it had flashed into his inner soul at that terrible moment when he was battling between his instinct to fight and plunder, and the yearning, newly-learned love for the wonderful Christian teacher. Now he understood how the face had driven the murder lust out of him, and he was glad it had.

The priest was brushing the drowsiness from his eyes and looking up from his straw pallet in the corner to see what bird or squirrel might be scratching about his little air hole. Beyond Benito's peering face the quaint, hewn-timber door of the cell stood wide open, disclosing a narrow vista of white cloister arch, worn red clay flagging paving the outer corridor, and still further, the broad mission compound, strangely deserted of a sudden, rimmed by the Indian huts, the wall, the fields and the orchards, and the whole flooded with blinding sunlight.

Father Francisco seemed to have no fear, no suspicion of his flock. When he had cast himself down on his miserable straw couch for that afternoon's siesta, after a hard morning's work with new pupils about the forges, he had left his door, as he always did, swinging wide to the balmy brilliance of the California winter day, and had fallen into a tired, honest sleep, blessing the Indians first in a murmured prayer. That very day, February 22, 1824, had been set—and history records it—for a general uprising of the Indians against the Franciscan padres in the two great missions of Santa Barbara and San Fernando, and the smaller establishments of San Luis Obispo, Purisima, Santa Ynez and San Buenaventura.

Suddenly Benito's blood froze under his naked skin. For beyond that open doorway he saw a concourse of warriors rush from the Indian quarters and come leaping, with brandished clubs, toward the mission. The boy knew that the other padre, the older one who had charge of the spiritual duties of the establishment, was visiting to the southward. He knew, too, that [illegible] dozen soldiers who comprised the mission guard had straggled away that morning to fish in the [illegible] Mountains.

Benito regained his breath with an effort.

"Padre, Padre!" he called down between the bars, "quick, for your dear life and the church! They will kill you—see?" He thrust his slender arm through the grating and pointed to the doorway.

One glance beyond the shadowed arcade into the sunshine, and Father Francisco understood. As still as a statue he stood in the middle of the floor, and bowed his head. The attitude of the gloomy figure filled Benito with awe. Was he, a little Indian boy, to see here before his very eyes a deliberate martyrdom like those of which the parchment told? Never before—and Benito had studied every expression of his beloved teacher's face, day in and day out—had he seen the man of God so entirely, inexplicably calm as at this dread moment. Not a quiver discomposed the resigned attitude of the strong body. He seemed a pillar of sorrow.

But in an instant the pain, the bitter disappointment that had gripped the priest within, shot out and wrenched his splendid face. This, then, was to be the reward of all the zeal, the self-denial, the real love with which he had labored to uplift these heathen!—so said the look on the padre's face.

Once more his expression changed, and Benito, paralyzed with wonder and fear, saw angry combativeness, grim determination, rise and obliterate the wince of the heartstring. The spirit of the man shattered the humility of the religious zealot. With the sudden [illegible] studied spring of the mountain lion, Father Francisco was on the other side of the cell. His rough serge habit, drawn slightly at the waist with the cord of St. Francis, seemed no hindrance to his agile limbs—built for other work than merely to kneel in prayer. In a flash the Franciscan's strong hands had gathered from the wall three great muskets which he, in all his Christ love for the heathen in his keeping, had not refrained from hanging there in the shadow, loaded and primed. He stood the firing pieces in a row against the wall, just inside the doorway, carefully, like guns neatly racked in an armory.

Then, with another wondrous bound, he was up to the rear wall, clutching with one hand among the [illegible] bars that steadied the frightened yet brave little Indian boy. With his other—his right hand—the missionary priest caught Benito, and drawing his shaggy [illegible] head close to the grating, kissed the Indian forehead.

"Bless thee, son," he cried fervently, "reward that awaits thee in heaven if not on earth, not for thy love to me, but to the church and those better things which thou hast learned from Christian lips. Though all else on earth be false, Benito is true. My reward is sufficient."

"And if I die for this, reverend father, will God let a poor Indian boy, enter the same heaven where you will soon——"

Benito's appealing voice stopped short with a gasp, and his fingers loosened from the grating. Lifeless, he slipped from the window sill where he had crouched, and thudded to the ground outside. An arrow, [illegible] into the doorway by an Indian who had knelt low just outside the cloister arch that he might shoot upward and inward, had missed the padre's head by an inch and spiked Benito's loyal heart.

With a backward leap, Father Francisco was at the doorway. Snatching one of the heavy muskets to his shoulder with the ease and skill born only of long practice, he stepped boldly forth onto the flagging of the arcade, no longer a priest, despite the cowl that hung over his shoulders where he had tossed it from his close-cropped head, and the crucifix dangling from his cord waist, but just a strong man, enraged, fearless, [illegible] muscled, dangerously calm. Ugly, skulking Augusto, who fired that silent, fatal arrow, had as well fired it into his own heart. He was already as good as a dead man, under Francisco Uria's steady, punishing eye. The Indian felt it in his cowardly breast, and instead of speeding the second arrow that he had trained on the Spaniard, ran back toward his followers. With an [illegible] motion the man in the priestly garb raised his weapon, fired, and the murderer lay sprawled on his face in the dust. The rest fell back, afraid of gunpowder.

The missionary replaced the empty gun and hurled forth another. A shower of arrows rattled on the cloister roof tiles and one whizzed under and chugged into the earthen wall, just over the priest's shoulder. [illegible] at the further end of the corridor something glinted. A musket, stolen from the soldiers' quarters, was held at Francisco's breast. Behind it shone a naked shoulder and half of a painted face, protruding from the shelter of the last big, square pillar of the arcade. With the swiftness of a trained huntsman the Franciscan brought his gun to his cheek. The Indian's nerve failed him, and he jumped back under cover. The padre was just as he was, tense, like a statue again. The [illegible] shoulder reappeared cautiously; Father Francisco's [illegible] musket belched. The Indian leaped backward and fell writhing with a shattered shoulder. A cloud of [illegible] rose beyond the unguarded north gate, and the [illegible] clatter of fast-falling hoofs grew nearer and nearer. A score of ragged but impetuous Spanish troopers, spurring their fleet, half-wild horses to fullest speed, [illegible] through the murderous band out in the compound. Mercilessly they lashed the surprised Indians with the [illegible] of their riatas and scattered them to right and left like a bevy of flushed quail. The commander, Sergt. Carrillo, galloped straight on to where Father Francisco stood, weapon still in hand. Leaping to the ground and doffed hat, the picturesque soldier bowed admiringly before the lone missionary.

"Reverend father, I salute not only a holy man, but a brave one; a soldier of the cross, and the cross of Holy Mother! What if Sergt. Carrillo had not himself been something of a man, both quick-witted [illegible] brave! I was jaunting leisurely [illegible] man, despatched from Monterey [illegible] sion guards. An hour's ride from [illegible] some of these worthless savages [illegible] Suspicion inspired me, and when [illegible] felt, they confessed the conspiracy [illegible] erend father? And the others—[illegible] mained loyal?"

Father Francisco bowed his head [illegible] all the vengeance, all the triumph [illegible] man faded from his face, from [illegible] features winced under another heavier [illegible] more somber than the coarse [illegible] wrapped him.

"One," he answered, faintly, [illegible] daled heel. Silently he hurried [illegible] turned into a passageway, and [illegible] the long building. Tears streamed [illegible] hard and defiant a moment before [illegible] rillo followed the priest wonderingly.

Father Francisco threw himself [illegible] side the still little bundle by the [illegible] small body into his arms.

"For Christ and the church he [illegible] heathen," the padre sobbed, remorsefully, "while I, forgetter of Christ that I [illegible] der. Would to God I had died [illegible] stead!"

And over a mound in the little [illegible] der the long, trailing shadows of the [illegible] there was carved on a stone:

BENITO, CHRISTIAN MARTYR.
LANIER BARTLETT.

ON AN ALLIGATOR FARM.

Hot Springs the Ugly Reptiles Are Raised For Profit.

[New York Tribune:] Of all queer farms none are more unusual than alligator farms. There are only two in the world. One is at St. Augustine, Fla., and the other at Hot Springs, Ark. The one at Hot Springs is by far the larger. It is on a small mountain stream that feeds a series of little lakes or ponds. These are made use of to form the "breeding grounds," "stock ponds" and "winter quarters" for this unique branch of the great American live-stock industry.

The Kansas City Star says there are at all times on the farm between 500 and 800 live alligators, ranging in size from little baby 'gators less than six inches long up to "Big Joe," nearly fifteen feet long. The little fellows have all been hatched on the farm, but the big ones were caught in the swamps and bayous of the South.

The alligator is a cannibal, and for that reason it is necessary to separate the ponds by means of heavy wire netting and to place reptiles of very nearly the same size in each inclosure. Big Joe, the monarch of the establishments, weighing almost 600 pounds, is kept by himself. Otherwise he would soon be the only alligator on hand. One practice at the Hot Springs farm is not likely to meet with the approval of the boys. The city gardmaster delivers all the homeless and unlicensed dogs caught on the streets to the manager. Then the poor dogs are killed and fed to the alligators. When a sufficient supply of dog meat is not available, tainted meats are procured from near-by butchers or from the great packing-houses of Omaha and Kansas City. The alligator is not at all particular, but seems to prefer his meat a little spoiled.

At the alligator farm the females are robbed of their eggs as soon as they finish depositing them. These are then placed in an incubator for hatching. After being hatched the little ones are placed in a separate inclosure, to prevent their elder brothers and sisters from eating them. They grow very slowly, so that an alligator two feet long is at least fifteen years old, and one twelve feet long may be anywhere from 75 to 150 years old. Some reach a length of sixteen or eighteen feet and are supposed to attain an age of more than 500 years.

If allowed to follow their hibernating habits in captivity the alligators would bury themselves in the mud and lie dormant for nearly half of the year, and business would have to be suspended during that time on the alligator farm. A way had to be devised for circumventing, in part at least, this hibernating instinct. The winter quarters are in a long, low building, divided into many compartments. Each compartment contains a pool of water through which run steam pipes so that the water can be kept at a constant temperature. One small pool will contain 200 or 300 alligators in their dormant condition, piled on top of one another like so many sticks of firewood. There they lie, apparently lifeless, through the winter, not awakening even to taste the most tempting morsel of food, though it be held against their noses; but when any are wanted for waiting customers or for shipment to distant points, it is an easy matter to enter the building and select as many as are desired.

Hundreds of baby alligators are sold every year to patrons of the health resorts at Hot Springs for pets, for home aquariums, and for curious mementoes to be sent to distant friends. For these purposes little creatures not more than six inches long are preferred. Reptiles of larger size, from two feet in length up to the largest that can be obtained, are sold for use as advertising novelties and for exhibition in amusement parks, museums, shows and menageries. Large numbers of all sizes are killed, stuffed and mounted in striking or fantastic attitudes, and used for ornamental and decorative purposes. The skins are tanned and manufactured into suit cases, satchels, handbags, belts, pocket-books, and, in fact, almost anything that can be made of leather.
The durability, beauty and costliness of the tanned hides cause them to be esteemed among the most desirable of leather materials. Even the teeth are not wasted, being manufactured into small ornaments and articles of jewelry, or sold as curiosities.

Fool's Gold.

Concerning an Altruist, Reptiles and a Mirage.

By a Special Contributor.

THE sun beat pitilessly upon them. The white sand of the desert reflected the glare upon their tanned faces and blinded them. The barren waste of landscape stretched out on all sides, level and monotonous, presenting a forbidding, hopeless aspect, as if to say: "Keep out! This was not meant for man."

Two burros, their pack saddles swaying with their gait, laboriously trod their way through the yielding sand. Behind them wearily plodded the ill-assorted pair of human beings.

Shepard, the younger of the two, was speaking. "When I was a boy I fell in love with a girl who attended the same school. I wrote her ardent love notes, relieved by dashes of humor. I thought these epistles were remarkable, compelling. Evidently the girl had the same opinion, for she read them at recesses to her schoolmates, and they laughed over them together, while of course I became an object of ridicule.

"In later years I formed high ethical ideas of life, altruistic and Utopian. I saw the misery of people, and resolved to relieve it by espousing the cause of labor. I made fiery speeches arousing the working class, finally becoming a nominal leader in their organizations, only to find afterward that I had been a cat's-paw to the real leaders who dominated the workers for selfish ends. My ideals and dreams had been shattered by the machinations of the ward heeler, and I realized how contemptible my blindness had made me.

"Last month my prospecting tour led me across that rich placer find. I worked it, taking out much ore, and found the values increasing as I dug. Yesterday you came along and explained that it was not gold, but mica, or fool's gold, and that I had wasted my time. You took with you a bag of it, to prove that you were right by having it assayed when we got to Los Angeles.

"These examples give you some idea of what my life has been: Great hopes, pursuing mirages, with always the same result—being forced to recognize myself a fool.

"But here, where one meets nobody, it is possible to hide one's deficiencies. Besides I like it, this endless stretch of barrenness. It is similar to my own life in its very bleakness and solitude. Only it is strong and able to punish its enemies, while I am not.

"We are friends, though, I and the desert. She has never betrayed me, and may yet lead me to where her treasures are hidden; and they will not be fool's gold.

"They say 'hell is paved with good intentions,' but somehow I can't believe it. I've tried to be of assistance to others only to find in the end that my efforts were wasted. I never tried to harm any one, but I have had the unhappy faculty of bringing injury and sorrow to those of my own blood and to my dearest friends. Do you think I will be held accountable for this weak judgment and lack of sense? Or isn't it enough punishment for a man to feel his weakness and be tortured by the knowledge of his blindness?"

The other man shrugged his shoulders and answered disinterestedly: "I haven't the least idea."

He was the exact opposite of his comrade, short, broad of shoulder, and heavily built. His face with its pug nose and tenacious look, his mouth that drooped downward at the corners, the thick sinewy neck and the little bloodshot eyes that took in everything but revealed nothing—all these made one at first glance compare him to a bulldog. And, indeed, among his haunts his associates knew him as "Bull."

All day they struggled on through the soft sand, the one talking from time to time; the other remaining silent or answering direct questions in gruff monosyllables with a preoccupied, cynical air as if deeply bored.

At sundown they halted and unpacked the burros. The younger man took from the pack a dozen slender sticks and began breaking them into pieces of six inches length, with which he proceeded to build a fire.

"You see, I know the necessity of economy where we have to carry our own firewood," he remarked. "The Indians say: 'White man build much fire, stay far away; Indian have little bit fire, stay close: all same.' So I follow the advice of the red brother, and find it good."

Bull grunted from where he squatted some feet distant.

After supper they smoked some time in silence. The vastness of the desert bore down upon them. The clear, starlit sky permitted them to look in each other's faces, and invited fellowship.

"How far to Barstow?" inquired Shepard.

Evidently the environment did not affect Bull. He answered shortly as usual: "Forty miles."

"Then if we get an early start we can make it late tomorrow night. What do you say?"

"Suits me."

"Then I can have another drink of water," said Shepard rising and going to the canteen. We'll have some to spare at this rate. I hate to see the burros go thirsty, though, even if they can go days without drinking."

Bull began unlacing his high-top, heavy, miners' shoes. He pulled them off his feet and placed them at the head of his blankets for a pillow.

"Drink all the water you want, Kid," he answered. "You can never tell about tomorrow's journey."

Soon the heavy breathing from the other blanket announced the slumber of the younger man. Bull arose presently and stood over his sleeping comrade, looking down silently, with unchanged expression, into the other's face. His hand toyed with his belt a moment, drew forth the glistening steel, and he stepped forward decisively.

From beneath his feet came the sharp "brrr-r" that even the dumb brutes know and avoid. He sprang back quickly, and electric thrills seemed to charge the air and circulate through his body. A guttural curse or two escaped him, his voice sinking to a whisper as he added, "Plenty o' time."

Over where the saddle pouch lay, he fumbled among the things and drew forth a leather bag. By the uncertain light of the candle he opened the bag and examined its contents. Each little object he held up to the flame and examined minutely. The occupation engrossed him for hours, and long after the candle had burned itself away, he continued to count out the little rocks, rubbing his hands over them, their very feel seeming to give him pleasure, for perhaps they told him of much food and ease and strong drink and days and nights of riotous living.

The signs of the swift brilliant dawn of the desert appeared in the eastern sky and brought him back to the present. Into his phlegmatic brain came a crafty thought. He would not be a butcher. Instead his little friend of the blankets should do his work. Ha! ha!

"Shepard," he called loudly, "get up! Time to get up! No, get out on this side; there's cactus over there."

The young man straightened out and, yawning sleepily, rolled over. Bull's eyes gleamed expectantly. Shepard sat on his blankets and donned his clothing while Bull's face became sullen and disappointed. Shepard arose and began preparations for the morning meal, and Bull's anger rose wildly within him. Where was the blasphemous, sacrilegious thing? He would put one more desert rattler out of the way—a rattler that wouldn't even bite a man who rolled on it!

Bull pulled up a corner of the blanket in his search of extermination. The next second he drew back his hand with a yelp of pain; trailing on his thumb was the squirming form of the reptile.

Backward he sprang in a mad endeavor to shake it off. The little brown bag on the ground caught under his heel and threw him heavily. The snake, torn loose by the impact, quickly coiled into a rope-like mass, struck savagely, wriggled loose from the man's clothing, and glided off across the sand.

Shepard walked over and grasped the other's shoulder. In his eyes shone a new light.

"Take your shirt off," he said calmly. Like a child, Bull obeyed.

"Lie down on your left side!" Bull, trembling in every limb did as he was commanded.

The younger man fell upon his knees. To the small needle-like pricks in the other's arm pit where even now the blood had ceased to drip, he placed his mouth. For a minute the silence hovered over and about them, and neither moved. A minute? Yes, but to both an age, an eternity. At last Shepard arose, and the new light of hope still beautifying his countenance.

"Let us be gone."

Together they hastily packed the burros and departed breakfastless. As if to assist them the desert sun boldly shot over the horizon and sallied forth on his daily travel. Both men walked rapidly, feverishly, urging on the burros, but with never a word between them. Dimly toward their southern goal at the earth's edge appeared a faint something that slowly but surely grew out of a mist into a reality.

"Trees? Trees? But there are no trees nearer than Rio Mojave!" thought Shepard.

On they went, hour after hour. Nearer and nearer came the tall slender pines and the lake of clear blue water. How inviting it was, beckoning them on from the sun-parched plain to its cool shelter, where they might bathe their dry throats and aching limbs and find repose! Shepard's gait became spasmodic. He broke into a wild run, became exhausted, and walked slowly, then was forced to stop and rest. He shaded his hand over his eyes and looked longingly at the cool oasis

"It's the new Arcadia," he said at last.

Bull cast a searching glance into his eyes and answered nothing

"'Tis the end of the desert," again asserted Shepard. "And only two miles away—only two miles!" He placed his hand over his heart and gasped feebly. An ashen pallor overspread his face.

"I'm sick, Bull," he said petulantly, "but I'll reach there, I'm sure."

In the heavens stole a fleecy, white cloud, strange traveler, out of its place in the desert. Straightway it made its course toward the sun, reached its goal and halted. Shepard looked again to the south. There were no lakes, no trees—only the pitiless, burning, waste of sand, that had no beginning, and no end! The phantom that had lured him on had vanished—with it the last spark that had upheld him. He sank upon the sand and lay still. Bull stopped and lay crouching beside him, looking him straight in the eyes.

The moment's dragged on with pitiless laggard feet. In the corner of the prostrate man's mouth, a little sore that had once been a fever blister and had enlarged to the size of a dime, swelled up and burst, a drop of greenish poison trickling down the chin. Shepard made a feeble struggle to rise, and sank back again. "I'm glad," he said weakly, "that I was able to do some good at last to some one."

He was lost in unconscious babblings for a while, but again found reason.

"Good-by, Bull," he said. "I—I've followed my last mirage." He breathed no more, but wandered off across the white sands and sought his cool oasis.

Bull arose and stretched his arms skyward. He found the burros and prodded them on their way until after some time he reached a slight elevation in the drift of sand. Pausing to look back, he espied the desert eagle circling around, above a black speck in the sand.

At the same time the bird saw the man, uttered a shrill cry, and sailed straight off in the distance. Bull watched him till he was out of sight, then, patting the little brown bag at his side, his lips drew back in a wolfish snarl as he echoed the eagle's cry: "Fool—fool!"

Esther.

THE STORY OF A FIGHT WITH THE DEMON DEATH.

By a Special Contributor.

AN old man sitting beneath a vine-covered porch slowly took his pipe from his mouth, and watched the smoke as it drifted away in the warm summer breeze.

"Mother," he said to the silver-haired woman who sat by his side sewing, "how long is it since Esther left?"

"Seven months the 16th of this month,', she answered a little sadly.

The old man took a long puff. "It seems seven years," he said slowly.

Neither of them spoke again for a long while, for their thoughts had traveled far away across the ocean, to a distant New England city. It was cold, very cold, in that distant city, and in perhaps its coldest corner stood a gray, granite building. It mattered little to the merciless north wind that within these walls lay the sick and dying, for it howled and stormed around the structure its very worst in anger at being baffled by the massive stones. In a distant corner of the hospital, where the wind had tempered its angry howl to a mournful dirge, was situated a small, very clean room. In this room was a small, white bed, and on the bed a very weak, dark-eyed girl. Had it not been for her labored breathing, one might have thought her asleep. Occasionally a white-aproned nurse stole softly in and, feeling the rapid pulse for a minute, marked it on the chart over the bed, and stole softly out again. Then a group of doctors appeared at the door. The gray-haired man who led them glanced at the chart, stood for a few minutes with his hand on his chin, and then said slowly: "She will not live until tomorrow morning!"

Three of the four young men with him nodded their heads in silence, the fourth drew in a quick breath and pressed his lips tightly together. It was a way Dr. Morse had when his mind was made up.

As they filed out, the figure on the bed heard the gray-haired doctor's voice: "You see, in these cases the trouble lies in the fact that the patient uses up all his strength in conquering the disease. Now, I remember a case——" His voice died away as the group turned a corner in the long corridor.

Yes, she was conscious, although no one suspected it, not even the nurse. She was too weak to move, but her mind seemed to have become very clear during the last few hours. What she had heard did not disturb her in the least. She was not even surprised, for she herself had realized it for some time. Then, she did not care, for she was so weary, so very tired, it would seem good to rest. All she would have to do would be to close her eyes, go to sleep, and rest. All day long she argued with herself the question of life and death, gradually growing weaker as night approached—the dim light of a winter's night. The wind died down with the setting sun, and the cold, dark building was left in peace. The weak form on the small white bed within moved not, but was still awake.

During the day Dr. Morse came in several times to look at her. He had taken a strange interest in this frail nurse, so far from home, and she in response to his strong nature had told him about her home life, had confided her struggles to him. Her life in the hospital had been one long struggle. The many disagreeable duties that fall to a nurse had been doubly repulsive to this girl, who came from a quiet, secluded home life. She had fought bravely and had overcome them one by one, but it had taken all her strength and she felt tired.

Her confidences and girlish reliance upon Dr. Morse might have proved dangerous with any other doctor, but he was different from the majority. He was one of the few men who became so engrossed in their profession that it is food and drink to them, sleep and rest, work and pleasure. He was young yet, but the result of his hard work already showed on his face. Tall, well-built, with shaggy brows overhanging two bright brown eyes, he impressed everybody as a man out of the ordinary. Furthermore, he had not allowed his work to absorb the finer feelings, as so often happens. He understood this young girl perfectly. He knew that the chances were that she would give up the battle with death from sheer weariness. He resolved that he would help her fight. This was what that quick-drawn breath and those firmly-pressed lips meant, when the gray-haired doctor spoke.

When at last he had finished his day's work, Dr. Morse went at once to Esther's room, leaving orders that he was not to be disturbed until morning. He had made up his mind how he should fight, for he had divined that she was conscious. It was nearly 11 o'clock when he entered and took a chair by her bedside. For a few minutes he bent over her, looking straight into her face. Suddenly he spoke her name. "Esther," he said. Her white face showed not a sign of recognition, yet she had heard. But she was too weary, too tired, to move. He continued looking into her closed eyes, and she felt that he was looking. Then he took one of her hands in his strong ones and spoke very softly but distinctly.

"Esther," he said, "you are not going to die. For the sake of the gray-haired couple whose life is your life you are not. Look! Can't you see them now? Can't you see them now? Can't you see the little white cottage caressed by the clinging rose vines you have told me so much about? Can't you see the little garden in front of it so carefully tended by the father because it is Esther's garden? Can't you see your own little room so carefully tended by the mother because it is Esther's room? Can't you see them both anxiously counting the days and eagerly looking forward to your return home? If you die, little girl, they, too, will die like the flowers in the little garden. You are going to live for their sake. Esther, you are going to live for your own sake, too. Have you so soon forgotten your ambitions, the ambitions we have so often discussed and which have borne you through so many struggles? Have you forgotten how you were wont to dream of the love light which would come into your father's face when you had said 'I have succeeded?' When you get well and strong again, Esther, I have new plans to unfold, plans which need only sweet hard work to perfect. Oh, it is sweet to live, Esther, when we have such ambitions! You are going to live for my sake, little one."

He rested his elbow on the bed and looked fixedly into the closed eyes. "Do you hear me? I will it," he cried, with his lips tightly pressed, "I will it! You shall live! Do you hear me, Esther?"

He spoke as though he had Death by the throat and was slowly but with a tremendous struggle forcing him back. Once he thought he felt a slight movement of the hand within his, but otherwise she remained as immovable as a statue. Hour after hour slipped by as he sat there concentrating all the energy of his strong young mind on the struggle. Sometimes he talked to her of her home, describing as vividly as possible her childish days as she had described them to him. Sometimes he sat merely holding her hand and repeating in low, passionate tones: "You shall live, Esther; you shall!" When the cold rays of the winter morning pierced the frost-covered windows, he was still there, but his head was bent low, his eyes were closed from utter exhaustion.

An old man sat by a white cottage, which was bathed in the rays of the setting sun. His wrinkled face was wreathed in smiles. He took his pipe from his mouth and said: "Is it six or seven days, mother, before Esther arrives for her vacation?"

"Six days" she replied, with a gleaming face. The old man smiled for a few seconds at nothing at all, and slowly returning his pipe to his mouth, continued his smoke.

AITLEEN LEXINGTON.

An Island of Lilies.

GREAT HARVEST OF FLOWERS ON THE SCILLY ISLANDS.

From London Tribune.

THIRTY miles southwest of Land's End the narcissus farmers of Lyonesse are busy over the January produce of their floral harvest. Many a hothouse is all aglow with white and gold, and local steamers are beginning to bear their growing consignments of fragrant boxes past the perils of the Wolf and the Rundlestone to the Great Western Railway terminus and starting point at Penzance. But beautiful as is this horticultural industry, and fascinating as it is also in association with stormswept little islands, runged around in the hours of heavy gales with a girdle of foam from the black crags of Penmuis to the towering rock mass of Minavawr, the story of its origin and growth is more romantic still.

Indeed that microcosm of the Scilly Isles has had vicissitudes of fortune, if we only start with the last odd hundred years or so of its story. In the Revolutionary and Napoleonic wars it did very well as a port; squadrons of warships and fleets of merchant vessels being frequent visitors to its island-encircled roadstead. The small farmers found an abundant market for their vegetables and other produce, not only with the vessels contained in harbor by easterly winds, but with the fleets always cruising off Brest and "the Gib," as our rock fortress at the mouth of the Mediterranean was familiarly known to them.

Then came the peace and a commercial collapse, partly redeemed from disaster by the inauguration of a kelp industry. Then the demand for kelp failed, and again there was distress. Still in the days of sailing ships an east wind always filled the pretty little roads, and undaunted enterprise also made Scilly a ship owning and shipbuilding port. Besides, the cultivation of early potatoes for the London market brought a new affluence to the farmers, who invested their savings in island-owned ships. Then the development of steam destroyed the shipowning and shipbuilding industry, and a spirit of financial gloom settled down on Lyonesse.

All the while, however, unknown to most of its inhabitants, the makings of a Pactolus lay disregarded in many an island nook, orchard and garden. And this brings me to a date about thirty-seven years ago, when it is known that in the Isles of Scilly there were eight varieties of narcissus quite apart from any that might be growing in the Abbey Gardens, the beautiful pleasaunce of Mr. Dorrien-Smith at Tresco. A few of these were to be found growing wild, others in the gardens of the farmers.

How these flowers came into the islands is, so Mr. Dorrien-Smith, the popular "King of Scilly," has told me, a matter of some obscurity. Sixty-three years ago, however, it is known that the captain of a French vessel which had taken shelter in the roads presented two bulbs of Campernelli to Mr. Gluyas. It is not unlikely that some of the varieties of narcissus mentioned may have been introduced by Benedictine monks, who through long generations occupied the Priory of St. Nicholas.

Certain it is that seventy-two years ago the late Mr. Augustus Smith, the uncle of the present "King," brought in several sorts of narcissus. To him must also be ascribed the credit of discerning the commercial possibilities of the bulbs. As he sauntered about his dominions his esthetic eye was observant of the narcissus, noticed how early and luxuriantly they bloomed, and came to the conclusion that as an export they might be profitable. At length he himself [illegible] Covent Garden with a small consignment of lilies, and was rewarded by receiving a check for a sovereign. As occasion offered he mentioned the matter to certain of his tenants, but they were influenced by a natural conservative instinct and did not at first act on his hint. A few of them, however, imitated their "King," in a modest way, and contributed their mite to the supply of the London flower market.

Scilly's total area is 3600 acres, of which rather less than 2000 are susceptible of profitable cultivation. Consequently the spare land, apart from the occupied farms, was more limited in quantity than it is in Manitoba. There was a great run on it, and in a very short time every available acre adapted to narcissus culture began to be taken up. The output increased by leaps and bounds, the weight of the cut flowers running into hundreds of tons. As lilies are not individually very heavy the total harvest of blooms reached a prodigious figure. One of the most striking sights to be seen at Scilly is the little boats laden with their fragile and fragrant flowers which struggle from the smaller "off islands" some dark and stormy wintry morning, against wind and blast, to reach the steamer at St. Mary's pier.

One consequence of the growth of the narcissus industry in Scilly has been the discovery by the farmers of the value of glass houses, and the islanders of [illegible] years ago would have been greatly astonished if they had been told how large an archipelagic area the [illegible] lapse of a generation would suffice to shelter in this fashion. For mild as the Scillonian winter is—the rare apparition of ice in a pond being a subject for excited gossip—the marketable narcissus cannot safely be grown entirely out of doors. Sand from the shore beaches, fierce spray from the mountain breakers, penetrates every nook of the islands during a heavy gale and plays havoc with the delicate petals of a fully-opened narcissus.

So the beautiful flowers—now quite multitudinous in their variety as compared with the original eight kinds—are picked while the tender bud is still protected by the green sheath, at any rate long before they are open, and brought into the hot houses, where, placed in beds and vases, they develop a size and beauty in damp temperature of 70 degrees Fahrenheit, which would be impossible. So after two years growth in the open the pineapples of the Azores have glass run in over the rails that the third year of perfect development may be unmarred and that they may acquire that [illegible] and those dimensions which now command the highest prices at the West End fruiterers.

Now at this moment the workers throng the Jersey lily fields gathering the unopened lilies, and the [illegible] stalks are being laid in the wicker baskets for conveyance to the safe shelter and even warm temperature of the glass houses. When fully open they are made up in bundles of a dozen and laid neatly side by side in the regulation boxes. And in cart or in boat they have been brought down to one of the little steamers which ply to Penzance, and then, their forty-mile journey over, are taken possession of by the Great Western Railway, which conveys them more or less swiftly to Paddington, and early morning sees the Covent Garden salesman proclaiming their merits to a matter-of-fact throng of buyers. One morning they are in the Cassiteridean home, innocent of the ways of cities, the next sees them in the heart of "the busy hum of men."

NEW PLAN TO SAVE CHILD LABOR.

A proposition to take all children under 14 years of age from factories and other places of employment and send them to school has been made by N. O. Nelson, a millionaire manufacturer, to the women's clubs of St. Louis. Mr. Nelson is to pay the children half the amount they would receive for their work, and the clubs the other half. The clubs have yet to give their decision, and, pending it, Mr. Nelson has undertaken to do the work himself. He has investigated for several weeks past every application to the truant officer for permits for children under age to work in the factories and has, at the present writing, found seven worthy cases. Each week these children call at Nelson's office and receive the money they would have been paid for working—an average of $3 a week. Then the children have been returned to their schools. In less than one-third of the cases investigated by Mr. Nelson did he find the people to be actually in need of the children's services.—[Reader Magazine.

But all's well that ends well, and I am glad to think that you have bid an eternal farewell to drink; for of course, with your prospects, not even as a weekly glass of beer, but only the barest necessities of life, will be within your means.'

"He then turned to the young woman.

"'And you, my poor Henrietta, I congratulate most heartily, for it is seldom that girls of your appearance get husbands. Never forget that you ought, by an unchangeable sweetness and a devotion without bounds, to try to make amends to poor George for your physical shortcomings. Instantly the young girl who conducted the booth seized the pretty umbrella, waved it over her head, and cried:

It Wouldn't Go Down.

IT is often claimed that artists and scientists should not marry. A wife and family, the contention runs, divert a man's thoughts from pure art or pure science to money-making, and in other ways besides they distract and constrain him.

Henry James, who is usually serious, defended the above claim rather frivolously at a dinner in New York on his last visit.

"For example," he said, "a friend of mine declared one night that he believed in study.

"'Nobody can learn in a lifetime all that should be known,' he said. "A man ought never to assume that his education is complete. I must and will keep abreast of the times, and I propose to begin the study of astronomy at once.'

"'Jerome,' said his wife calmly, 'you'll have to think of some better excuse than that for staying out to all hours of the night.'"

Prematurely Old Mr. Brown.

THE late Ferdinand Brunetière, the famous French writer, said of America, in one of his witty after-dinner speeches in St. Louis:

"You owe your progress in great part to your inordinate energy and ambition. This takes you very young. A wonderful thing, but a little hard and pitiless. There is no room for old age in America. I remember calling on a friend of mine in Brooklyn one afternoon. A boy of nine or ten years opened the door.

"'Is Mr. Brown in?' said I.

"'I am Mr. Brown,' the boy answered. 'But perhaps you want to see old Mr. Brown, my father.'"

Against Public Drinking Cups.

DR. SAMUEL G. DIXON, Pennsylvania's noted health commissioner, is waging a fight against the public drinking cup.

Dr. Dixon said one day in Harrisburg:

"I have seen people clean their teeth with tooth powder and dental floss, rinse their mouths with listerine and other antiseptic washes, and then go and drink calmly from the public cup in a railway station or a theater. Such people remind me of a school boy of Ardmore. Seeing this boy wading ankle-deep in a half-frozen puddle one day in January, I said sternly:

"'Tommy, why are you not at school?'

"'I've got the whooping cough,' he answered, splashing about vigorously."

Horseshoes and Bad Luck.

CHITTO HARJO was pleading in Washington for the Indians' right to roam in nomad fashion, like their fathers.

"They tell us to trust to fortune," Chitto Harjo said, "and then we'll get out rights. But we are tired of trusting to fortune. Fortune has used us Indians as it used the paleface instructress at the Indian school in '97."

Chitto Harjo smiled and went on:

"This instructress found a horseshoe, and to get good fortune, put it under her pillow, along with her false teeth. In the morning, in the hurry of dressing, she substituted the shoe for the teeth, and did not discover her mistake till her affianced husband asked her in tones of horror at breakfast what was the matter with her mouth."

The Narrow Old Lady.

CONGRESSMAN PERKINS was talking about his bill for a progressive inheritance tax.

"Even a billionaire," he said, "would approve this bill if he looked at it in a broad way. But few billionaires look at such things broadly. Everything to them has but the one narrow, personal aspect.

"They are much like the old lady who, seeing a storm signal, asked what it was. She was told that the Weather Bureau now studied the weather, and telegraphed its forecasts far in advance all over the country. The old lady, looking at this fact in a narrow, personal, billionaire-like way, could see but one advantage in it, and she said:

"'Oh, isn't that convenient for the washerwomen!'"

A Gift That Wasn't Given.

APROPOS of Mr. Carnegie's latest gift, an editor, taking out his notebook, said the other day:

"I can tell you of a gift of $1.50 that Mr. Carnegie once refused to give. Let me read you the letter asking for this gift."

With a laugh he read

"Dear Mr. Carnegie: Understanding that you are blessed at present with an unusual surplus of income, and knowing well your generous spirit and desire to do good to those who will help themselves, I want to ask you to make me a contribution of one dollar and fifty cents.

"When I was a young man my mother gave me a hymn-book, which I faithfully used. It is now, thanks to my efforts, worn out, and I think it should be replaced, and you are the man to do this.

"Appreciating to the full the generous deeds that have made your name illustrious in this and other countries, and believing that in making me this donation you will be carrying on the spirit of your work, I am,

"Yours faithfully,

"MARK TWAIN."

"P. S.—Don't send the hymn-book; send the dollar and fifty cents. M. T."

A Good Recommendation.

WILLIAM J. FLYNN, the noted Secret Service agent, was discussing a certain German burglar alarm with a New York reporter.

"It was this alarm," said Mr. Flynn, with a laugh, "that a thick-set man called on a hardware dealer about.

"'I'd like to sell you, cheap, 400 burglar alarms,' the man said.

"'Are you a manufacturer?' the hardware dealer asked.

"'No, sir,' was the reply. 'I'm a burglar.'"

Gets There Just the Same.

HILARY K. ADAIR, the well-known detective, was complimented in Galveston on an arrest that he had made. The arrest had been mysteriously achieved, and Mr. Adair was asked to explain it. This, though, he refused to do.

"There are so many ways of catching criminals," he said, laughing. "You know what the old man told his wife? She said first to him:

"'Don't talk, John. You can't say I ever ran after you.'

"'True,' the old man assented. 'And you can't say the trap ever runs after the mouse, either, but it gathers him in just the same.'"

The Courage of Conviction.

THE man who taught President Roosevelt to box, in his Harvard days, has shown the beginnings of that personal courage and aggressiveness when it comes to a fight, which all the world has since seen and admired. Now comes the man who played ball with the present Chief Executive, with a story showing beyond all question how even in his early days Roosevelt was possessed of the courage of his convictions as to what was right.

"We had a first-rate club, 'The Osceolas,' with the President's neighbor, Fred Weeks, for our captain, and W. J. Youngs, who was his secretary when he was Governor at Albany, and Amos Knapp, as members. I was second baseman.

"I remember one game when Roosevelt acted as umpire—he was then about 15, I should say. We were up against the team from Huntington, a larger town than Oyster Bay, some eight miles away, but so good a rival for the competition to run red-hot. I've seen some of those ball games end up in a general riot. This particular match was played on neutral grounds, half way between the two towns—and I remember now that Roosevelt umpired by accident, the regular man having been disabled by a foul tip with almost the first ball pitched.

"He proved a dandy; had every rule down fine, and showed the best of courage in giving decisions. The big kickers of the Huntington club couldn't do a thing with the little umpire. Several times the two clubs rushed in and surrounded him, the whole eighteen players and about a hundred rooters talking at the same time, but Roosevelt stood his ground and stuck to every decision he gave; and they were always fair ones. That was the first time, too, that I remember an umpire's running the bases to watch close decisions.

"We won our game, 23 to 19, after thrilling play and kicking for three hours—and then both teams gave three hearty cheers for the little umpire, declaring he was the best we had ever had." W. I. P.

"I don't know."

"Beg pardon, mum?"

"I've been divorced. At present my name is Mrs. Jones in this State. In several States it is Miss Smith, my maiden name, and in three States it is Mrs. Brown, my first husband's name."

"This your residence, mum?"

"I eat and sleep here, but I have a trunk in a neighboring State, where I am getting a divorce from my present husband."

"Then you're married at present?"

"I'm married in Texas, New York and Massachusetts; divorced in South Dakota, Missouri, Alaska, Oklahoma and California; a bigamist in three other States, and a single woman in eight others."—[Chicago Tribune.

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

THE LANDSCAPE GARDENER.

He Is a Necessity in Preparing Extensive Grounds.

By Ernest Braunton.

In all grounds of any extent it is necessary to employ a competent landscape gardener, not a gardener who is but a grower of plants, but one who makes a study of them as a part of the picture or landscape to be built. The needs of the place may be so simple that only advice need be given, but as a rule a plan should be made, and plant list furnished.

The plan should show position of buildings, roads, paths, flower beds, trees, ponds, tennis courts, and all the features and accessories of a complete garden. The plant list should, by a numbered or lettered key, give the name and position of all plants used, whether ranking as individuals or forming groups of shrubbery or beds of flowers. By this plan and planting list we are enabled to see quite clearly how a place will look when finished and the cost may be very closely estimated by contracting gardeners. If the place be small and simple, a good gardener is competent to carry out the work, but if the grounds be extensive and complex, have many and varied details, the supervision of the landscape gardener becomes a necessity if satisfactory results are secured.

Effect of Light on Plants.

The work of modern experimenters, while it may not be expressed in words, still indicates that the kind of artificial light used in physiological experiments upon plant growth predetermines the results. If electricity is the source of light, affirmative results may be expected, such as those recorded by Siemans, Deherain, Bailey and Rane.

The work of Deherian of Paris clearly shows that the quality of the light had much to do in determining results. The naked arc electric was frequently hurtful while the same luminary enveloped in an opalescent shade or jacketed by a solution which absorbed certain portions of the spectrum, instead of being harmful really became somewhat of an advantage. Bailey's work is a record of like results. The naked arc light being harmful at close range, while plants under a jacketed lamp were less injured and at given distances really benefited by the use of the light. Rane in working with the incandescent electric light records no such injury but shows quite as marked advantages as those recorded from the use of the arc lamp. These results from such different sources would seem to show that it was a question of light of a given quality and intensity rather than a question of the source or manner of producing the light.

Planting of Deciduous Ornamentals.

The planting of deciduous trees should always be while they are dormant, or just as they are beginning to grow in the spring. In other words, shade trees can be transplanted any time during the winter but in this climate the month of February is preferable. Most people like to plant large trees, i. e., trees five to seven years old; trees that have made ten or twelve feet or more of growth. Such trees can be successfully planted if care is taken to dig them with a good supply of roots. However, a two or three-year-old tree is preferable. The shock of transplanting is less severe on small trees than it is on large ones.

Insects on House Plants.

The most widely-used insecticide for greenhouse fumigation is tobacco in its various forms. In many instances it is without doubt the cheapest and safest insecticide to use against plant lice and a few other greenhouse insects. Its effectiveness, however, under the best conditions is not great, as it requires repeated use at short intervals. Moreover, it may cause serious injury to the plants. In the case of violets it has been found to be of only slight value against plant lice working in the bud, and while it may destroy the so-called "green aphis" when exposed, it is not effective in killing the "black aphis." On the other hand, tobacco may prove injurious to the foliage and flowers, bringing on epidemics of "spot." Tobacco is also useless against scale insects in general and mealy bugs. The desirability of some insecticide as easy to use as tobacco but more penetrating and effective and less likely to injure plants was apparent, and became absolutely necessary in the study of the diseases of certain crops.

Hydrocyanic acid gas, since its introduction as a remedy against scale insects of the orange, has proved a great value as an insecticide. Previous to experiments early in 1905, though it had been occasionaly tried in greenhouses, hydrocyanic acid was not recommended on account of its injurious effects upon plants. As a result of a series of careful experiments it has been found that different species and varieties of plants, however, were found to vary remarkably in their power of withstanding the poison. This in many cases appeared to depend upon the open or closed condition of the breathing pores as well as upon peculiarities of the cell contents. In each case the proper amount of gas to use and the length of exposure must be determined by experiment. It is impossible to give a general rule applicable to all plants in all stages of development

LOS ANGELES SCHOOL GARDENS.

THE UTAH STREET SCHOOL AS AN ILLUSTRATION.

DURING the last two years school-garden building in Los Angeles has gone forward with rapid strides and has resulted in a great deal of good, especially in the less favored parts of the city in regard to ornamentive vegetation, or in fact, ornamentation of any kind. Over across the river, in the bottom lands, stands the Utah-street school, one having among its pupils a heavy percentage of children either of foreign birth or native born of foreign parentage, and perhaps the greatest good has been accomplished in this district.

This Utah-street school yard has been nicely planted to trees, shrubs and vines, and although the space at command is limited, very pleasing results have been attained. Ornamentation in this part of the city seems more infectious than the promoters of the school-garden movement has dared to hope, and premises for several blocks surrounding the school have taken on an improved appearance. Weeds have been cut down, rubbish cleared away, trees and plants cared for, and many new ones planted. The inspiration of the school garden has indeed been carried to the homes, and it is hoped that the present year will record a marked extension of this worthy movement. The organization behind our school gardens is composed of men and women who not only give their time, but money as well, to see that the work is successfully carried out, and the public should rally to their support. Just at present, funds are needed to hire help for plowing and fertilizing the school plats. Plants and seeds of all kinds are needed, more especially climbers to run over the fences and up the walls of buildings, not only upon the schoolhouse, but playhouses, woodsheds, etc. There are doubtless many people in our city who would be pleased to donate plants if they knew whom to communicate with. These plants will be called for if the donors will notify Mrs. R. Wernig, No. 1933, or Miss E. A. Lamb, No. 1929, both residing on Ocean View avenue.

The Last Arbor Day.

No previous Arbor Day celebration has been so well attended, nor has so much enthusiasm been aroused among the masses as on the one just passed, and it really looks at present as though some highly satisfactory results will be obtained. It is hoped that the city, by the aid of private individuals, may be enabled to purchase a strip through the Arroyo Seco sufficiently wide to make a parkway between Los Angeles and Pasadena, and at the latter place the citizens have already acquired some of the land flanking their charming municipality.

The scheme above outlined will involve a comparatively light expenditure on the part of our city, and will preserve for all times, one of the most beautiful and interesting resorts to be found in Southern California. A number of organizations most zealous in this commendatory work were present at the last Arbor Day exercises and expressed themselves as determined to form a powerful central organization for the purpose of successfully prosecuting the work in hand. Members of the City Council and park commission were also on hand and after the completion of the day's programme were driven over the territory which it is proposed to acquire. All expressed themselves heartily in favor of the movement, and believed the whole lands desired might easily be obtained at a reasonable cost. It really looks at the present writing, as though this great chasm, the last remaining natural link between the city and the heart of nature, would become a part of our park system.

Civic Beauty.

The appropriate use of trees, shrubs, vines and herbaceous plants in the adornment of city, village, suburban, or country home grounds gives a charm and beauty which are interesting and pleasing to the passer-by as well as to the occupant of the home. Plants are a means of expressing restfulness and beauty. Their gradually changing aspect with the succession of the seasons heightens their pleasing effect and relieves monotony. The changes which occur in the life of vegetation during the year have caused man to speak of the stages of human existence as the "spring," "summer" and "autumn" of life. The leaf, the branch, and the flower, as well as the general form of the plant, manifest a grace and beauty which art endeavors to copy. While art cannot take the place of nature, it nevertheless plays an important part in teaching us to see and appreciate the beauties of nature. After the eye has been trained to see and the mind to interpret the beauties which the eye beholds, then association with nature produces its greatest effect.

In the artificial adornment of public or private grounds by means of plants, Nature is our best instructor. From her we learn the uses of grass, flowers, vines, shrubs and trees, and how to combine them to the best advantage. By growing together for ages, the various classes and species of plants have developed forms, habits and requirements which enable them not only to live and thrive in harmony, but actually to assist one another. Man should first provide for his necessities, then for comforts, and finally for pleasures. In a new country such as ours, the expenditure of time and means for the adornment of grounds has naturally received too little attention. The people have been necessarily concerned with acquiring lands and buildings. But a stage of development has now been reached when Americans should give more attention to the embellishment of their home grounds, and also streets, public squares, school and library grounds, to the end that we have more of the city and village beautiful on every hand.

Proper Street Planting.

Trees planted on avenues, streets and boulevards should be planted at a uniform distance, according to the varieties selected for planting. Planting closely furnishes the streets with some shade almost directly if the trees are properly trained for such planting, but as soon as their growth has become large enough to deprive their neighbor of light they should be cut in vigorously. No tree should be planted closer from the street curb than six feet. If this distance cannot be obtained, it is preferable to plant between the houses on the sidewalk, and if neither is possible the best is to give up planting. Engineers should, by all means, bear in mind that cities must have shade trees, and when laying out avenues and other thoroughfares should make allowances for broad sidewalks. This will admit of giving the trees a large body of good soil, which is the most essential move toward successful planting.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

THE BLACK LEGHORNS.

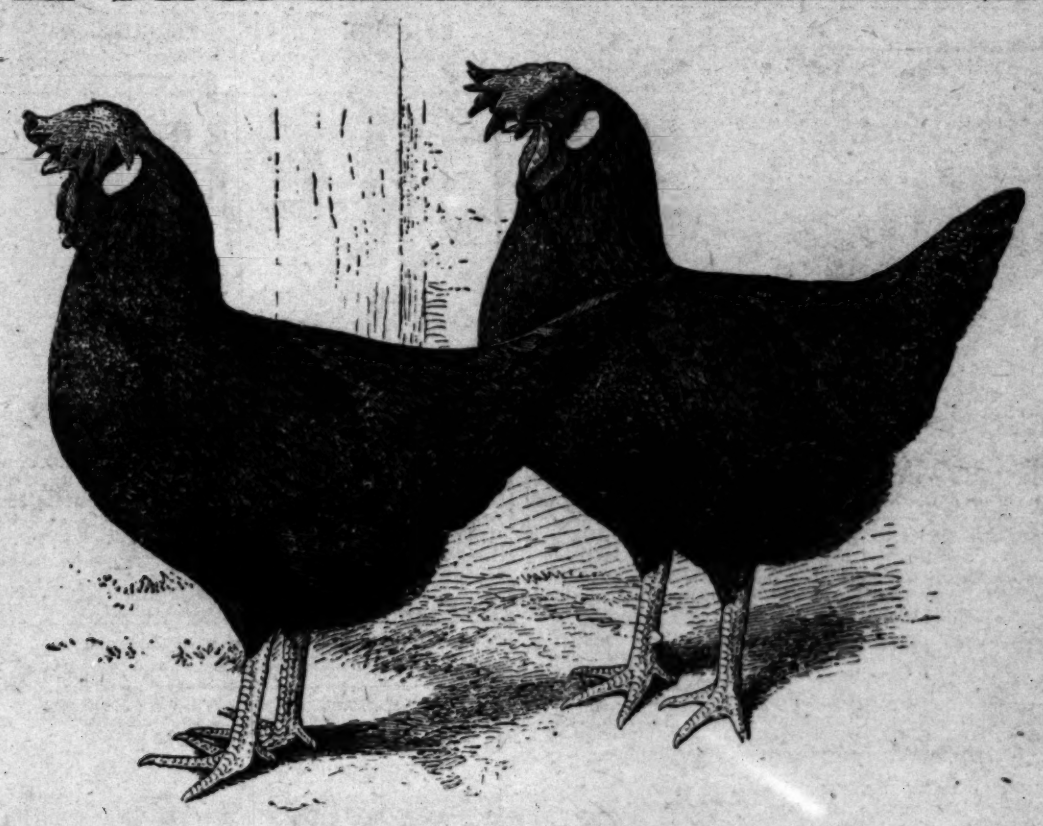
CAUSE OF THEIR ABSENCE FROM SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experience with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

ON more than one occasion the local poultry shows have contained a few good specimens of Black Leghorns, though of late years but few if any are to be found hereabouts. This is, undoubtedly, due to the fact that the Black Minorca largely takes its place, being easier to breed to standard requirements, and at the same time possessing an economic value equally desirable. One of the difficulties in breeding good Black Leghorns is to maintain size, and another is to secure good yellow legs and beaks, the tendency being to breed a slaty or brown color, rather than the yellow demanded by the standard. Otherwise they "come" true in color of plumage, and when at their best, are among the most beautiful of the Leghorn fowl.

It is quite a common failure with fowls in California that they are quite apt to deteriorate in size. Indeed, the American tendency to breed for color points is quite apt to be at the expense of carcass. In this respect the English breeders are decidedly in the lead. Their Rocks, Leghorns, Wyandottes, etc., show a blacker bird than the American type. As an evidence of this note the depth of body, keel, and strong neck and big combs of the Black Leghorn illustration shown herewith. As compared to the average American specimens, these show a bird of larger frame and contour. They are hardy, good producers of white eggs, hence can be commended to the fancier who wants to try his skill in breeding them true to show-room requirements. A brief description is as follows: Beak yellowish brown or yellow, shaded slightly with black; eyes red; face bright red; comb bright red; wattles and ear lobes, former red, latter white; shanks and toes, yellow or yellowish black; plumage, glossy black, with greenish sheen throughout.



BLACK LEGHORN PULLETS—ENGLISH TYPE.

The Ever Popular White Rocks.

As a result of the late show of the Los Angeles Association some notable sales have been made in breeding stock, and much capital in one way and another has been invested in poultry plants. Possibly the most interesting transfer of stock was the turning over of William M. Humphreys' superb flock of White Rocks to Arthur J. Little of Monrovia, who now possesses the largest flock of this breed in the West. Mr. Little is an orange grower possessed of the conviction that the good American hen can earn more money per acre than the golden globes will produce. Result? Oh, he is going to drop the citrus fruits and go into hen fruit exclusively.

The White Rock is indeed a popular bird in Southern California, and more especially in Los Angeles county. Its champions claim for it an egg production equaling that of the Petaluma White Leghorns, and coupled to this, that as a table fowl it has no equal. These points we shall not dispute here—but there are birds and birds, and then "some birds." A strain is what skillful handling makes of it, and we do not doubt there are birds of nearly all breeds with fine records for egg-production. But just at present, well, the Barred and White Rocks are quite in fashion, to say the least.

About Breeding Pens.

Hens which have been forced to winter laying should not be selected to lay the breeding eggs. Individual specimens may have ability to lay fertile eggs, but not as strong eggs as hens which have had rest or partial rest during the winter months. Pullets should not be selected in preference to hens. A pullet has little character, and lays eggs of little character, although fertile. An old hen of good blood, the mother of grand chicks year after year, mated to a young sire may be expected to lay the best eggs for hatching cockerels, and the few pullets will be grand. It pays to keep a few old hens of quality, although they are too old to lay only in the breeding season. A breeder can depend upon three-year-old hens for laying the breeding eggs better than upon hens of other ages. They will lay regularly, and their habits being formed, their eggs will be of even vitality; mated to a young sire, they are expected to throw pullet eggs.

If one has but one breeding pen, it is desirable to have a young sire, two old hens and five or six three-year-old hens. It is best to be careful, and in one setting of eggs use eggs from each hen; having eight hens, use one egg from each three-year-old, four from the best old hen, and three from the other old hen. When the first setting hatches, if the old hens have thrown all cockerels, make the next setting with two each from the old hen's eggs.

In selling settings of eggs better results come from various hens than from the eggs of one hen. The eggs must be marked when laid, and one must watch the laying hens to be sure about eggs. Each hen must be leg-branded and her number put on the egg with hate, with a lead pencil. The person feeding the hens is the best one to go intimately among those laying, and no excitement should be caused in the laying pen. The hens should be happy and fearless of the caretaker. Trap nets are much used by the best breeders, but are not a necessity.

Barnyard fowls, which roost in trees and lay under bushes, steal nests, and bring surprise broods home, are a long way up in nature's ways. Many a barnyard hen, stealing her nest in the orchard hedge, hatches every egg, and rears every chick. Many a rancher thinks, consequently, that barnyard chicks are the ones to grow, and laughs at the confined pure-breds with less fertile eggs. Each can draw a lesson from the other. The barnyard fowls are dependent upon environment, and may lay wonderfully many fertile eggs, while the environment is just right. It isn't just right a good deal of the year unless one makes it so. A rancher with a mongrel flock does not depend upon a poultry income, because it is uncertain. One year it may be good and another not good. His income is from eggs principally—market eggs. His fowls are not in it as meat. Any animal working for a living is thin and small. His fowls work for their living, and are a long way from luxury as meat. When one begins to make environment and depend upon poultry, he begins to make poultry, and it does not pay to make environment for poor poultry. Ranchers are beginning to make environment for the best. On the other hand, the breeder of pure-breds can observe with profit that right environment of the barnyard fowls does conduce to fertility of eggs, and that freedom is the prime factor. In confining the breeding pen, one may grant many a freedom with a little thought. Give them a large pen with a tree in it, if possible, and if any do not want to roost in the open house prepared for them, let them roost in the tree. They will all roost in the tree, if permitted, eventually, and no night in this beautiful country or any ordinary rain will injure healthy birds. In case of hard winds or rains, they can go to the houses, if the door be left open. Make big, nice nest boxes and put them in sheltered places. If they insist upon laying on the ground, or in the house corner, imitate what they like in various parts of the inclosure. Put earth in the nest boxes. Put swinging nest boxes in the tree, if they are a high-flying kind of fowl. Each hen will always lay in the same nest, if she can get it, and by having fine nests for the hens, each hen can exercise her choice as a rule. The nests should not be made alike. By having many differing nests the trap-nest system is bettered for breeding stock, there being no apparent restraint upon them. Keep the yard plowed and fit for a sand bath anywhere. If the fowls are heavy and want to steal away to lay, make an environment for them to steal. Bring in some cuttings and put a bit of old carpeting over for shade and concealment. If a hen is not inclined to lay, the sire will go into the nest, show up its quality, and persuade her. If things are made comfortable, the hen will incline, and that means business in a nature way.

Nobody should be allowed to bring fright into the breeding pen. Fear of the caretaker will defy all endeavor. A person impatient with poultry cannot hope for success.

SHOT THROUGH HEART ...

Secretary of Agriculture under President Cleveland) was asked to address a meeting of soil tillers on the evils with which the American farmer had to contend. "The greatest trouble with the farmer," said our authority, "is ignorance, bull-headed ignorance." We are just a little suspicious that much the same thing is the matter with many people who are contemplating going into the poultry business for a livelihood. And by this we do not mean that the novice is necessarily illiterate—far from it; but we do mean that his working knowledge of poultry culture is often so sparse and wrongly focused that failure is almost inevitable. Much can be learned of value by garnering the experiences and knowledge of others. In this connection we would suggest that the beginner master some of the literature pertaining to the practical phases of the industry. In this way much can be learned calculated to show ease the way to success. If a suggestion can be allowed, the writer would recommend among books Robinson's Poultry Craft, the Standard of Perfection, Brown's "Races of Domestic Poultry," Wright's "Poultry Keeper," and about three of the best poultry papers. With this fund of information well in hand, a visit to the most successful plants in a given neighborhood will afford an insight into the local conditions which will prove of real service to the novice. If one is interested in one or two breeds, the beginner should by all means secure the best literature obtainable on the particular variety of fowl he proposes to grow.

As has been remarked on more than one occasion in this department, poultry culture can be profitably followed in the southwest; indeed, there is no section where the demand for hen fruit and carcass is so strong

Food for Chicks.

If you have a lot of incubator chicks in a brooder and are not succeeding well with them, and have not tried feeding the dry balanced ration put up by scientific people, you should go at once and get some. It is astonishing how little attention they need when fed the dry ground food in a hopper, and how they will thrive. Young chicks need a different food from grown poultry, and one need not bother to study the need, if he will put his faith in the tried ration, which has done so much for the chick. The poultry-supply houses will tell one how to buy. If fed to the mother hen and flock of chicks, she will immediately teach them to eat it in preference to any other food.

What "Times" Readers Want to Know.

"Feeder," of Santa Ana, writes to know the best method, to keep eggs intended for hatching, and how long they can be kept.

Place in a cool situation, say between 40 and 50 degrees above zero; lower than 40 is undesirable, and over 50 is apt to hasten deterioration. Avoid currents of air, which promote evaporation, and avoid foul air and "bad smells." Eggs can be kept for quite a while and still maintain a percentage of fertility, though chicks hatched from stale eggs are quite apt to be weaklings. We advise keeping eggs not over two weeks, whether for hatching or eating, or even scrambled.

W. A. C., Fresno.—"Can you give me the standard requirements for Plymouth Rocks, or print it in The Times?"

We should dearly love to do so, but the American Standard of Perfection is a copyrighted book, which prohibits printing what you ask. Get a copy; it is to be found at all of poultry-supply houses in Los Angeles.

H. L. Goodrich, Sacramento.—"Wish you would advise me through the columns of The Times what breed of fowls puts on weight most rapidly the first three or four months; that is, which breed is best for broilers and fryers. Are the White Sherwoods good layers, and what breeds are crossed to produce them?"

For broiler purposes the White Wyandotte is a popular variety, closely followed by the Rocks. Those who have been in the business of broiler raising claim that the former produces a blockier, chunkier carcass in less time than the Rocks, though in the writer's opinion there is little choice. The American class as a whole furnish good broilers. "The Sherwoods," "White Wonders," etc., are non-standard varieties, somewhat resembling the White Rocks, possibly a trifle larger, and have lightly feathered shanks. They are rated as fair layers of brown eggs, and the hens are good sitters.

X. Y. Z., Hanford.—"Is there a book teaching the art of judging fowl?"

Some fifteen years ago there was published a volume by the late Henry T. Lee, I. K. Felch and the elder Pierce entitled "The Philosophy of Judging," which has long since been out of date as well as out of print. Study the standard carefully; apply its rules and deductions to your own birds, and you will soon "catch on" as to the knowledge and application that go to qualify one for judging a poultry show.

"Newcomer," San Diego.—"During my few trips among the breeders of Southern California I sadly miss the Brahmas and Cochins, which are so popular in my home town in New England."

We take it for granted that the law of evolution has declared for the "survival of the fittest." Both Cochins and Brahmas of high quality have been hard bred and exhibited in Southern California, usually by a few fanciers of the bird. They have, however, never become generally popular in the sense in which Rocks and Wyandottes, Leghorns and Orpingtons have. Possibly they have not been pushed the way other breeds have, though the writer has an impression that the heavily feathered breeds are not quite so well adapted to this climate as the more trim and smooth-legged breeds. You can, however, grow them, and produce fine specimens.

As It Is Today.

THE BOOK OF THE SONG OF LIFE AS TWO READ IT.

By a Special Contributor.

THEY bade one another farewell in a sheltered corner on the platform of a deadly quiet little mid-western station. Both of them were shy and awkward children, but happy in their hearts because he had found a voice, however halting and confused, for the words, "I love you. Will you marry me some day?" And she had answered in a whisper, as the locomotive drew nearer: "I love you too, and I will come back and marry you when the right time comes."

It was their first kiss, pure and cold as the wind on the starlit prairies in winter. To him, waiting for the inspiration to say these words, while he toiled in the gray earth of his father's farm, expectation had promised a thrill such as he had never before experienced, but that he knew should be there. It had not come, and he could but content himself with watching the receding train that took her from him, with her family, to a new life upon a government claim in Oklahoma, and remember that he loved her and that she loved him. That was all he wanted now. The rest would come right some day, for his arms were strong, his will good, and he carried in his memory a picture of her pure, frank profile as she knelt looking up to the altar in their little church, on Sundays.

So they parted. Back he went to the farm, but a few weeks later found him in the tumult of a city, on a winter evening. The strange throng jostled him roughly, the lights blinded him, the blare of a thousand stridencies deafened him. With his chin in his collar, he waited, bitterly cold, on the corner, for enough courage to plunge into the experience whither her little letter had sent him. Should he be driven home again by loneliness, or take his chance in this amazingly unfriendly whirlpool? He had her letter. He must dare and win out for her sake. Down in his pocket he crushed it. Hers it was, and she was his. A strange yearning came over him to hold her in his arms again and feel his ownership in the warmth of her body, the pulsation of her heart, the breath from her lips.

His struggle for bread and his fight against loneliness took him among those who strove often hopelessly and in vain. He felt with them the sting of a biting poverty, the cry of a myriad unfulfilled desires, the weariness of an eternal struggle. His great open heart sorrowed in their sorrows, yearned with their desires, looked with clearer eyes than they to their dim but unfading ideals, for over all of them, and with the insistent call to do them good, he saw, pale and clear-cut, her pure, frank profile, as she knelt looking up to the altar.

Light never failed him. He found a way to rest the toiler, to comfort the distressed, to feed the hungry on a bread more nourishing than that of earth. His broadening soul took in the wisdom of the schools because it would lift him up and help him to draw them higher.

He was at length a man. He went back from the schools to the toilers he loved, strong and pure, the light of a holy exaltation on his face, and pointed out to them, in eager, thoughtful, earnest words, the way to the altar toward which her undimmed profile still looked, pale and pure and frank.

He failed now. They would not even listen to him.

Down went his head in the loneliness and the despair of the idealist. He was alone, again, on a cold corner of the amazingly unfriendly city, and his heart cried out for balm to its bruises. Her image did not come to him. Was it because he had gone to work from a selfish motive and had sought his own honor? How alone he was! What a failure he had made of life! This was indeed a cold, dreary world.

From out the shadows a gaudy figure came part way, then shrank back, as if afraid, beckoning to him. The old revolting instinct of purity within him was frozen with the winter cold. He tried to rouse it. It did not answer. He strove to evoke the pale image of the girl who had been the inspiration of his—failure. In vain.

Again the finger beckoned.

Why not?

. . . . . .

"Ah!"

Stinging sleet out of a gray dawn miles out from the city brought him to himself. He was walking, walking, walking away from the night, and the question it had asked him.

Was this, then, the key to the secret of his fellowmen?

He took no credit to himself that he had not yielded. What were the value, else, of a stalwart ancestry of good, true men and women?

But his poor brothers! His poor, poor brothers and poorer sisters whom no heredity withheld!

A haggard, blear-eyed, painted face, reeking with drink, came closer to him than the pure profile that seemed fading away in a white mist as it gazed at the altar. He took up again the threads of his life of ministry. The key had opened the door. All came to him who could touch their sorrows and their sins with the finger not of an untainted demigod, but of a kindly-eyed man.

After years of silence, a letter came from her:

"I hear that you are doing a great work, and as I am entirely free, I am going to keep my promise of long ago, and come and do for you the things that only a woman can."

Back to his mind came the girlish profile looking up with innocent, trustful eyes. What had she had to teach life, the life he had learned, out in the West? What could this pure lily do for the blood-red passion flowers of his daily toil? Would she not, in her spotlessness, shrink from these sordid ones, in whom the golden spark was all but hidden? Out in the free, pure breezes of the plains, she must have matured without a whisper of—this.

But the promise! For how much ought it to count now?

Help him! His heart cried out for the full rich love of a good woman, one whose complete womanhood would reach out to meet the depths of his perfect manhood; one who could thoroughly understand all that he could now give in return. But she? And yet there was the promise between them.

He was alone, one day, when a woman came quietly to him. Her simple garb and her low-voiced inquiry for him proved her not of those who sought his ministry. He held out his hand mechanically, and was thrilled with the clasp of her firm, cool one. Glancing from her gray-streaked hair to her eyes, he was held by something there. What did he see in them? Beyond the girlish frankness, that she still retained, deep, deep down he gazed, and drank refreshment from what he saw of knowledge tempered by a woman's richest sympathy.

God had been good to him: she, too, understood.

The Book of Life is open everywhere to him who will read it.

A HINT FOR EMPLOYEES.

"Mr. Whilfiin?"

Thus the head of the concern, looking up from a long conference with a customer and needing now the services of his stenographer.

But no stenographer. That conference in the office had begun late and continued late—until fifteen or twenty minutes, in fact, after the stenographer's regular hour for departure—and he had stayed there all right till the last minute of his time, but when, so to speak, the whistle blew he had put on his hat and skipped, this also on the minute; and when the boss wanted him—Mr. Whilfiin wasn't there.

"Mr. Gwilfiin?"

Thus the head of another concern in another office, after another conference, likewise prolonged to quite some time beyond the usual office-closing hour, and this boss also now requiring the help of his stenographer. And——

"Yes, sir," says Mr. Gwilfiin, stepping forward not grouchily but calmly and quickly, ready—really wanting to help the business and more than willing to stay there and work as long as the boss did—in short, on the job.

They get through the work comfortably and get away together; the boss going his way and the stenographer his, boss thinking to himself as he moves along that that was a pretty good stroke of business that he had just finished up and incidentally finding it coming into his mind that Gwilfiin is a pretty good sort of a man to have around.

When in due course of time, as each was sure to do, Whilfiin and Gwilfiin both applied for a raise, which one do you suppose it was who got it? Was it Mr. Whilfiin or Mr. Gwilfiin?—[New York Sun.

WHERE SNUFF IS STILL USED.

"So you thought that snuff had died out, did you?" said a millionaire snuff manufacturer of Philadelphia. "Well, it has died out among fashionable people, but millions of pounds of it are still consumed.

"I send a great deal of snuff South. In Georgia, Alabama and the Carolinas the poor 'dip' snuff in huge quantities. To 'dip' it is to rub it on the gums and in the crevices of the teeth.

"I also send a lot of snuff to France. The lower classes in France still carry their horn snuffboxes, and still sniff snuff up their noses in the regulation way.

"I do a good trade, too, with South America and Africa. The Kaffirs stuff their noses with snuff mixed with pepper, while the Patagonians ram it up their nostrils with small wooden spoons.

"Have no fear about the snuff trade. There is still a good living in it."

Bartlett Pears Done for.

PROF. SMITH of the Whittier Pathological Station says that in his opinion pear growing in California is a thing of the past, unless conditions change. He thinks the growing of Bartlett pears may be continued only by the few large growers who have familiarized themselves with methods of control and give the subject unceasing attention. The other orchards will no doubt go under. This is somewhat startling, especially when this variety has been the pride of California and was, till recently, one of our most profitable fruit crops. Let us hope that some means of immunity may be discovered. It will require long, laborious experimentation with resistant stocks, with the possibility of failure absolute and final.

The Tussock Moth.

W. H. VOLCK, now entomologist for Santa Cruz and Monterey counties, is the author of a valuable pamphlet upon the tussock moth, which insect has become a pest in the Pajaro Valley. Volck is well known here, having served as horticultural inspector in Los Angeles county four years ago. The bulletin contains about thirty pages with illustrations of a high character and a full description of the moth described. It also contains records of methods of fighting the pest and tables showing damage done by it on the apple trees in that valley. This painstaking, plodding boy from Long Beach is winning his way to success and has already added considerably to our knowledge of insects and means of their control.

The Last Leaf.

I HAVE an anomaly in a wealthy farmer friend—he is 80 years old, yet just coming into his prime of hope and achievement in fruit growing. What would you say to a bouyant young man of this character who would ask your advice as to taking out fifty or sixty acres of olives and planting to citrus trees? You are talking to a man of 40 who has lived four-score years. His youthful determination induced me to advise taking out half the olives, thoroughly plowing out the roots and planting his orange trees so none of them would stand where an olive stood. These olives never bear, so I said, "Pull out that portion of the trees where the land is less suited for the olive, leave the balance and try upon them new schemes of pruning, cultivation and irrigation." And that is what he will do.

This gentleman is a successful orange grower. He has tried barley, grapes, deciduous fruits and olives all in succession upon the same land. It was an example where rotation of crops paid him nothing whatever, and now he is reaping a rich harvest from his last experiment—citrus fruits. He has spent a fortune upon the land, his fine business sense carrying him through in other lines from which he derived a revenue to run his farm. I have another aged farmer friend here who built a mileage of railroad sufficient to reach from Los Angeles to Denver, and all of the Nicaragua Canal that has been constructed. He does not care to plant trees for some one else, but cultivates his orange grove for present use. These rare old gentlemen are of the salt of the earth, and an hour with either is a treat not to be overlooked. Clear of mind, vigorous of physique, up to date, these old friends know more than any one I have met except the young fellows of twenty.

* * *

The Australian Naval Orange.

AN orange grower, who is troubled with the presence of non-typical and profitless trees asks if the sports are Australian navels, or Washington navels deteriorated to this condition. It is difficult for one to tell with the tree before him. I cannot believe that the hundreds of thousands of off-type trees have all come from the descendants of the Lewis Wolfskill trees imported from Australia long before the true navel was fruited. Wolfskill made his importation in 1874, and I do not know of other importations, though there may have been other lots brought from below the equator. There is no hard-and-fast rule of determining these two fruits. However, I am sure that most of the so-called Australians are but deteriorated specimens of the other variety. I know that some of them are.

If your tree is later of ripening, that is a sign of the Australian variety, for it was a box of Australians that took the premium at the New Orleans fair in 1883, though they were exhibited as "Riverside Washington navels." This premium fruit was sent from California at a late date of the exposition. It came in fresh, fine and late, after the Florida fruit, with which it was opposed, was about out of the race. It is a shame to say it, but our premium fruit was very poor stuff, compared with what Riverside put up in the 80's from the genuine Bahias. Again, the true Australians are consistent in their perversity, growing rank and straggling, sparsely fruiting and altogether unlovely but consistent. A sport of the Washington navel may have the silkiest fruit upon the lower limbs and coarse, pinky specimens upon the upper branches. Or, the whole tree may bear poor fruit. Or, the same tree may bear fair fruit one year and worthless fruit another. I believe the Australian tree is less liable to disease, and always more vigorous, as is the case with most shy-bearing kinds for obvious reasons. Whether its shyness of production is the cause of its vigor, or the result, is a question. The pomelo is the most productive of wood, most vigorous and most fruitful of all our citrus trees, so all signs fail us. But there is no question as to what should be done with any rebellious tree, whether of this or that variety. It should be budded over or extracted. However, if the orchardist is not a practical observer, with due experience, he may remove or bud over many Washington navels just coming into bearing when the same would become typical trees if left to further maturity.

Killing Underbrush.

A CORRESPONDENT asks as to the best time to cut off small brush in order to cause the roots to die without sprouting. Authorities differ upon this question, the preponderance of evidence being that greater results will be obtained by shrubbing in August. This is especially true with those plants that shed their leaves, such as willows, cottonwoods, sycamores and deciduous oaks. For evergreen oaks and other evergreen brush the best time to shrub them down is late in the fall. Deciduous brush suddenly deprived of their foliage, while the roots are surcharged with sap, take a root ferment that is more fatal than a fire. Broadly speaking, August is the best month in which to do this work.

In the clearing of land in this part of the State the pine cuts but little figure. However, it is easily killed, and should be cut down late in the fall. It is of some economy to burn the débris over the roots of the most resistant sroots. Of course, the best method is to grub out the chaparral, as this not only aerates the soil but places the land in far better condition by the elimination of root acids and other decaying ferments. It is held by some of our most experienced fruit growers that an orchard will not succeed well if planted upon land that has contained oaks. This is probably only a notion, as I can see no reason for charging the oak with poisonous qualities not held by other trees. It is a fact that the growing of forest trees injure the quality of the soil for other crops, for the soil has been so long inert that it could not at once adapt itself to the demands of new trees. Newly-cleared land should be surface cropped some time before planting to orchard trees. I have been told that liming soils just cleared and containing decaying roots has a good effect in destroying the poisonous elements left by the removed trees.

* * *

Yellowing Citrus Trees.

CITRUS orchards in the San Joaquin Valley have thus far been remarkably free from some of the troubles noted south of the Tehachapi; the chief complaints having been caused by the effects of water seepage from high-lying ditches in the foothills. The soils themselves have not been found in fault except where it was attempted to plant orchards on heavy clay subsoils, or hardpan; emphasizing the need of a careful examination of the substrata of any land designed for tree culture.

Quite lately, however, complaints came of yellowing and languishing of citrus trees grown in apparently the best quality of loam soil in the Porterville region. Portions of young orchards planted on low ridgy lands were found to become diseased, their leaves yellowing and dropping while those located in lower ground continued to grow thriftily. The samples of soil and subsoil showed that while in the lower ground where the trees were in good condition, the subsoil at three feet contained only 12 per cent. of lime carbonate, on the higher land it was full of white lime nodules in the third foot; and that the fine earth around them, in which the roots vegetated, contained from 22 to 39 per cent. of lime carbonate. This evidently exceeds the tolerance of citrus roots, hence the yellowing of the leaves. In another similar case, examination showed that even where the trees were doing finely (the soil being very rich,) the calcareous layer was reached at from four and one-half to five and one-half feet. It is probable that so soon as with progressive growth the roots reach the above depth they will here also be affected by the excess of lime.

This is a condition which perhaps cannot be remedied by any application made to the land. When lands have been injured by artificial overliming or excessive marling, the effects can be neutralized by the use of organic matter, usually applied in the form of stable manure.

Pruning the Apple.

AN Azusa subscriber has an apple orchard and writes for some directions in pruning. As no professional tree pruner can be secured the grower has to depend upon the work of the farm hand, and wishes a few suggestions to be handed to the workmen. Assuming that the trees have reached the age where it is not necessary or admissible to prune for shape, they should be cut back very little in the warm valley of Azusa. It is necessary to leave the foliage as dense as possible to protect the tree and fruit from the heat. Again, some varieties, like the Bellflower, do not thrive well from heavy pruning, under any circumstances, and are better without it. In some localities such varieties as the Newtown Pippin have been top-grafted on the sunny side with kinds bearing heavy foliage to shade the Newtown boughs with their naturally sparse foliage. So this famous apple will stand but little trimming on that account. The general direction as to how to prune is, to cut to an inside bud with trees liable to spread too far laterally, and to an outside bud where they are inclined to shoot straight upward. This is especially advisable with trees just coming into bearing. Afterward, the tree should be thinned out where necessary and all interfering branches removed. If the apple is kept from too much wood growth on the one hand and not opened or exposed to the sun heat that is about all the [fruit] it needs.

In the warm soils and situations, where the apple is liable to premature starting in midwinter, pruning should be done late, as fall or early winter pruning stimulates the tendency to off-season growth and bloom. The apple does not require topping back like the peach or apricot, at least only in shaping the young tree, as its habits of fruiting are entirely different from the peach and apricot. The main object, aside from the convenient shape of the tree, is to secure the leading branches as near the center of the tree as possible, where the fruit may get the most strength and protection. The rule is that the higher the summer temperature the denser the tree, but in lower summer temperature a large degree of openness is desirable. But every locality should maintain a competent tree [pruner], especially in Southern California, where few individuals have enough work of this character to keep a man devoted solely to pruning. Our trees do not need pruning to make them fruitful, but they do need it to make them bear their fruit well and not too abundantly.

Paw-Paw Fruit.

A STATEMENT published some time ago to the effect that "an important drug product of the Montserrat district of Spain is the dried milk of the paw-paw fruit," brings forth the following comment from Consul-General Ridgely of Barcelona:

"Paw-paw fruit is not grown or even known in the Montserrat districts, either of Catalonia or Valencia, nor as far as I can learn in any part of the Spanish peninsula. Reference is probably had to the Montserrat district of Venezuela. The paw-paw tree referred to is a tropical or semi-tropical tree (carica papaya) grown extensively in Venezuela, Cuba and the West Indies, where the fruit (called papya by the Cubans) is preserved in sugar but seldom eaten in its natural state, though a similar fruit is eaten in Kentucky, Tennessee and other Southern States of the United States. The milk, I am informed, is obtained by searing the unripe or stem of the tree on which the fruit grows. There is a Montserrat in the British West Indies famous for its limes."

Trees Per Acre.

THE rule for finding the number of trees to the acre set in squares is: Multiply the distance in feet between the rows by the distance the plants are apart in the rows, and the product will be the number of square feet for each tree. Divide the number of square feet in an acre (43,560,) by the above product, and the quotient will be the number of trees to the acre. If the trees are to be set by the equilateral triangle method, divide the number required to the acre "square method" by the decimal .866, and the result will be the number to the acre by this method. There are tables published, giving the number of plants to the acre in almost every combination of distances apart, but it is not always possible to have this table in the pocket.

Seed Growing.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA is doing something in the growing of garden seed these times. What do you think of one firm's sowing 2800 pounds of onion seed? Did you suppose that much, or many onion seed could be collected in one place? Last season this firm shipped 400 tons of onion sets to Texas. The California Seed Growing Company of Westminster has seventy-five acres planted this spring for onion seed; beans, peppers, peas, cabbage and various other garden kinds for the seed market. How these large enterprises spring up without our knowing what is going on! Mr. Murdock, who has long been recognized as our best local authority on vegetable growing is in charge of the Westminster seed farm.

Lawn Making.

A CITY property owner called a few days ago to know why his lawn "went back on him" after the first year of its life. From his description of the condition the lawn suffered from the inert character of the soil bed. The soil was fertile, it was pulverized reasonably well, he said, and given good attention in watering. The lawn is a permanent decorative feature of the premises, and hence its endurance, or span of life, is of the greatest importance. To make life long and lusty the soil must be prepared at least ten inches deep, and it should be made rich with available plant food that deep, no matter how fertile the soil may be in the natural, but unavailable elements of plant food. If the seed bed is sown without this preparation it is useless to expect its improvement. If one has sown his lawn to blue grass under these poor conditions the best way to improve it is to plant it to white clover. The clover will make its own available soil in time, but it is a slow process even with that plant compared with the progress made by first enriching the soil.

It is not possible to make the land too rich for a permanent lawn. Thoroughly composted stable manure is the best fertilizer that can be found, though prepared fertilizers may be used as a surface dressing as the needs of the plants develop. It should be free from weed seeds. A plot for lawn, 50 by 50 feet, should have at least three wagonloads of this manure mixed with the soil mill and much more where the soil is thin. Fifty to 75 pounds of ground bone and fifty pounds of high-grade fertilizer upon the surface of this space will make the young grasses boom. If the lawn land has been given to green crops, especially of legumes, the burden of lawn making will be less. If the soil is very sandy a top dressing of clay, if properly worked into the soil, will prove of lasting benefit.

Fertilizing Potatoes.

"THERE is one fact," says a gardener, "which I have never seen refuted, and that is that manure should be placed upon potato ground the year previous to planting the crop, and that the manure at the time it is spread should be well rotted. Potatoes planted in fresh-manured ground, or directly in contact with the manure, invariably develop scab. The land should be well fertilized the preceding year, if possible, planted to some crop, so the ground can be worked up late in the fall. The following spring thorough cultivation should take place, after which chemical fertilizers are distributed over the ground. Potatoes require a large amount of potash, so that the fertilizer should have this material in a readily soluble form; in fact, all constituents of the fertilizers should be readily soluble, if no manure has been used. There are two formulas for using chemical fertilizers for potatoes which are creating a great amount of interest and considerable discussion. One is called the potato formula 7, 4 and 10; the other 4, 8 and 10. In plain English, this means 7 per cent. nitrogen, 4 per cent. available phosphoric acid and 10 per cent. potash in the former; and 4 per cent. nitrogent, 8 per cent. available phosphoric acid and 10 per cent. potash in the latter. The favor seems to rest with the latter. Potatoes love a light, rich loam, mellow loose and well worked, and the finest yields usually come from new land or from turned-over sod. There should be plenty of humus in either light or clayey soils, as moisture is a prime requisite, though too much will cause both blight and rot."

Melon Growing.

A man from out West has a few wonderful memories of his boyhood farming, and his greatest joy is to renew his youth in our garden. One of his pet recollections is the melon barrel—ergo, we had a melon barrel. This is a clever scheme. Take a hogshead or barrel, cut it in half, horizontally. Bore two-inch auger holes around the sides, making several in each stave. Sink this device into the garden in the place selected for melons, and leave the top six inches above the garden level. Fill the barrel with manure and other fertilizer, bank well-fertilized earth around it and plant the seeds there. Next fill the barrel with water, which sinks into the manure, and flows out through the side holes, placing the manure water under the seeds where the roots will soon find it. Nothing is better for this purpose than soap suds.

When the melon is ripe, it parts from the stem with slight resistance. When the melons have set place a board under them so that they may ripen off the ground. Around the half-barrel three or four vines could grow, radiating in different directions. The best test for a ripe watermelon is to place the ear close to it, then press hard with the hand, and the fruit, if ripe, will yield slightly, and a cracking sound will be heard. Tap it with the finger and if the sound is hollow, the melon is ripe.—[Vegetable Garden.

Stable Manure.

IT has been considered by many competent authorities that barnyard manure properly handled will yield the farmer $3 per ton or $6 per the average spreader load. Prof. Harry Snyder of the department of agriculture at the University of Minnesota states as follows:

"When a dressing of eight tons of manure is applied, which is not a heavy dressing, an increase of twenty bushels of corn is secured the first year. We have secured this much and more in our experiments. It is not difficult to assign a price to the corn. In addition to the increase of the twenty bushels of corn, more corn stover is secured, which can be used for feed and thus be turned into manure and made to add to the fertility of the soil. It is safe to say that the increase in the corn crop alone is $6. The value of the manure does not stop with the first year. If following the corn the second year after the application of the manure, wheat be sown an increase of at least eight bushels of wheat per acre will be secured. This is all due to the residual action of the manure and the better cultivation of the land. The average value of this wheat would be about $4.50. The additional straw from the larger crop of wheat is converted into manure and returned to the soil.

Strawberries as Food.

AN official of the Department of Agriculture in discussion of the nutritive value of fruits says that the average man who should undertake to live on strawberries would have to consume eighty-eight pounds of them in a day in order to obtain a sufficient quantity of one of the most important elements of food, protein. But while he was getting the proper amount of protein from the strawberries, they would give him seven times too much of another necessary compound, namely, carbohydrates. Forty-four pounds of tomatoes a day would supply nearly the right quantity and proportion of protein, carbohydrates and fat, the three most essential constituents of food. The chief value of fruit consists in its acids which are important to health.

About the Garden.

THE farm without a garden should be regarded quite as hopeless as a home without a mother. The farms are, at the present day, few and far between and do not boast of a garden of some sort. Some of these are devoted almost entirely to flowers, others given entirely to vegetables and foodstuffs. Sometimes it is our happy lot to run across a farm-garden that hits the happy mean between the two extremes. Fruits, herbs, vegetables and flowers in profusion; these planted and cultivated with order will not cause confusion to any farmer.

A garden to be useful should have small fruits, such as currants, raspberries, strawberries and the like; also vegetables of nearly every variety including asparagus and rhubarb or pieplant. Turnips, potatoes and such things may be planted in a truck patch near the house. Then I would have herbs in plenty—sage, sweet marjoram, summer savory, sweet fennel, sweet basil, wormwood, horehound, rosemary, coriander, lavender, angelica, caraway, thyme, saffron, borage, catnip, tansy, anise, balsam, dill, rue peppermint watercress and the like.

Some of these you may find convenient to plant in a blackberry patch away from the garden, as they spread rapidly—others, such as watercress and peppermint on the bank of a ditch or ravine. Once started an herb garden will grow and flourish with very little trouble from the gardener and it is a pleasure to sit down to a table and eat wholesome, well-seasoned food.

Hollyhock, sunflowers and petunias, zinnias, peonias, coxcombs, gaillardia, amaranthus, morning glories, marigolds, cannas, ten weeks stocks and ornamental gourds are suitable for the garden. The more delicate plants and shrubs, roses of various kinds, honeysuckle, etc., I reserve for the yard. There are so many pretty flowers that cultivate a taste for the good and beautiful that no yard should be without them.—[Epitomist.

The Home Garden.

THE housewife cannot undertake it alone. She must enlist the interest and sympathy of husband and children. Make the children partners in the enterprise. If possible give each a share in the receipts from the sale of products as well as in the work of caring for the garden. The garden should prove a source of revenue. Long Island farmers sometimes make a profit of $1000 from a single acre in one season. This is done by thorough tillage and by using every foot of surface area. At least two crops are grown each season.

Consult your agricultural papers for seedmen's advertisements and write for catalogues. Order standard varieties at first. Try novelties in a small way. Take your children into your confidence and let each have a part in making out the order. Each will have a special interest in some one fruit or vegetable. This will do much toward stimulating interest at first, and the products themselves ought to keep it alive. There is joy in garden-making, and there is health in "garden sass." Let us help you in any way we can. Insects will invade, and diseases will appear. The bulletins of the experiment stations describe remedies for various kinds of enemies.—[California Cultivator.

A New Winter Lettuce.

THE bureau of plant industry recently reaped its harvest of excellent lettuce seed from a large plot which it had under cultivation in close proximity to its chief's offices in the grounds of the Department of Agriculture. The interest attached to this particular yield is that it is seed of a type of lettuce sturdy and strong and able to withstand the diseases to which forced lettuce is heir.

From $2,500,000 to $3,000,000 worth of lettuce alone is forced in the United States each winter. Greenhouse gardeners in an endeavor to get rich quick have failed to note that this forcing was weakening their stock until now the weak lettuce often becomes so diseased in the hothouse that it is by no means rare for a gardener to lose an entire crop of greenhouse lettuce by a disease to which these overstrained plants are particularly liable.

Dr. B. T. Galloway, chief of the bureau of plant industry, in order to correct this evil has been working for two seasons on this subject and has at last succeeded in obtaining a crop of winter lettuce plants immune to the lettuce disease. At the same time the plants are of large size and capable of developing as early as the most specialized winter lettuce.

From these extra large early and fine heads another crop was raised and the seed sown. The seed from successive crops, carefully examined and selected from time to time, was planted during the past summer in the department's experimental plot and the seed finally secured carefully guarded and later distributed to greenhouse men and State experiment stations. It is believed, concludes American Cultivator, that through this work will be saved from ruin the winter lettuce industry, which for the last three years has been threatened with extinction.—[Field and Farm.

Speaking of Roses.

AMONG rose-growing countries California stands preeminent. Nowhere else does the softening influence of a semi-tropic sun call forth such luxuriance of blossoms and perfection of form and color as in our own sunny clime. In this respect no section of our great State is supreme, for in all parts the rose is most truly enthroned as the "Queen of the Flowers" by the admiring tourist, whether he visit the lands frowned upon by the majestic Mt. Shasta or basks in the balmy zephyrs that are wafted inland from the bay of San Diego.

There is no question but the determining influence in this magical development of bloom is superiority of climate. Rose plants are sent to us from all lands and it matters little what their "race, color, or previous condition of servitude," with us their blossoms simply "run riotous."

The original types of roses, those simple little single roses so familiar in the wilds of all parts of our country, have been culled and crossed with the wild roses from every land, Europe and Asia more especially, until the parentage of the present day advanced types is somewhat obscure; but we do know that from these humble types the glorious horticultural triumphs of the twentieth century have come and that the progress of rose breeding is still onward and upward, toward roses better in every respect than those that have held the public's favor in the past decade.

In this great work of plant breeding California is well to the fore and many are the victories over the forces of nature that are each year recorded for our growers, for it is not along the lines of least resistance that the most satisfactory development of the rose comes, and many, many thousands are thrown away ere one be found worthy.

Papa Gontier, though not far removed from the wild types in that it is semi-double, is nevertheless, well-nigh perfect in form, color and general adaptability, for it has been a grand rose for all parts of the Pacific Coast and considered equally good in any other countries. We have lately heard that a new rose called Lady Battersea is a marked improvement on Papa Gontier, but have not seen enough of it yet to speak with certainty. If such should prove to be the case, however, it will at once become a general favorite.—[California Cultivator.

SCIENCE REFUTED.

"Geologists," he muttered, "put the world's age at 500,000,000 years."

He sneered.

"How do they account, then, for the 600,000,000-year-old jokes that from day to day appear?"

And with a hollow laugh the humorist—for such he was—modernized a Phoenician epigram by substituting for the word "chariot" the word "automobile."

Breeding Invalids in Public Schools.

IN the Southern California Practitioner for January was the first of a series of articles on "Health and Development of School Children," by Prof. George L. Leslie, director of the department of science in the Los Angeles city schools. Dr. Leslie refers to the following as physical defects which absolutely limit growth and development, no matter what the training and environment may be: Eye strain, defective hearing, adenoid growths, enlarged tonsils, flat chests, spinal curvature, defective motor ability, defective nerve conditions, defective nutrition from whatever cause, etc.

The author properly declares these to be "vitality sappers" and "energy wasters." Pupils who are thus defective are not sick, in the usual sense of the word.

Parents and teachers are often unaware of the far-reaching influence of these defective conditions. As Dr. Leslie properly says, the health and development of the child and youth stands—or should stand—first in all educational work at home and in school. He might have added that one of the greatest evils of our American school system is that it forces upon children, who need all their surplus vitality for growth, an excess of mental strain, involving the studying of hard problems at home in the evening, thus sapping the vital powers and laying the foundation of serious nervous ailments or consumption, that may cost them life or at least make their life a misery and a failure. The editor of this department strongly urges all parents who read this department to absolutely refuse to let their children do any studying of an evening, no matter what the circumstances may be. This, in some cases, will involve the necessity of taking them out of school. Well, far better do that, if you value their lives and health more than their acquisition of a little superfluous "book larnin'," which, in many cases, is of no practical benefit to them, but rather an incumbrance. See that the mental facilities of your children are not developed at the cost of the physical, or they may live to curse you. Frank Allport, M.D., recently said in "Pediatries:"

"We should remember that fifty thousand American children are annually removed from schools on account of debilitated physical and nervous conditions brought on by physical incapacity and injudicious mental pressure. Such children, being unable to acquire a suitable education, fall by the wayside, grow up in invalidism and ignorance, and help to fill the ranks of the weaklings, the worthless, and the criminals."

Then there is the exceedingly important question of fresh air. It is quite a common thing for children to come home from school with headaches, due to the close air of schoolrooms, into which scores of young lungs pour their waste matter. In Japan, you may see a school in session under flowering cherry trees. Why couldn't we, at least, have open-air kindergartens?

Last, but by no means least, is the question of the food supplied to these young people, who need not only fuel to furnish heat and force, but also to provide for their growth. On this subject, Dr. Jessie H. Farwell writes to the editor as follows:

"I wish to speak especially of children and youths, from about the sixth grade until they have finished the high school, or gone on to the normal school, business college, etc. As a physician, I have had many of these students to treat, and as a nurse have seen many more. Being a woman, I have had more girls than boys to deal with, and it is with them more prominently in my mind that I speak. The girl, in the first place, will work harder than the boy, and will not take the active out-of-door exercise which he will and does take. Therefore, the teacher pushes her greatly to her detriment. Being indoors and stooping over her books, she does not get the proper amount of oxygen, so the nerves are starved, the food is only half oxygenated (burned,) and we have many waste products which are poisons. These are absorbed by the system, and sickness is the result. She has the results of overwork indoors which he has not, so she starts out handicapped, at the age of eleven or twelve, when both are maturing. Up to this time of life, the usual child has taken any food set before him, and has relished it, but now the general nervous disturbance, the strain of school work and social duties, the false moral, physical and psychic conditions under which girls live, makes the system demand force to keep up the pace. Sweets furnish this force in the most readily available form, and naturally they turn to them to supply the craving for the force. Sweets pave the way for rich foods, and soon all desire for proteid food and plain vegetables is lost. These are the foods which alone properly build the body—the proteid building nerve, muscle, etc., the vegetables and fruits furnishing the mineral salts which supply the iron, lime, phosphorus, etc., necessary to keep the body in perfect health. With this diet of sweets and pastries our child is being really starved, so we see the rounded shoulders, compressed chests and poor teeth, because these foods do not contain enough mineral to make bone or good blood.

"Besides this actual starvation in the midst of plenty, we have a process of poisoning going on within the child's body, every hour of the day. These foods cause fermentation, the resulting gas causes distention of stomach and bowels, and perverted secretions the whole length of the alimentary canal. Perverted secretions mean undigested food, and the consequent absorption of the poisons generated by the decaying material. This very absorption of poisons carries so many ills in its train that a large book would hardly suffice to describe them all. The distended stomach, pressing upon the heart, produces much of the heart disturbances so common, as well as the fainting we so often see in young girls. The distended bowel causes constipation, so we have more absorption of poisons, besides having much intra-abdominal pressure, which exerts a baneful effect upon the pelvic organs, if they are at all abnormal, which they usually are in these days of wrong living.

"At this time of life the excess of blood should be at the pelvis, nourishing all the pelvic organs and the ligaments which hold them in place. Instead, however, the excess is at the overcrowded and greatly overstimulated brain, and at the digestive apparatus, trying as only nature can try, under most adverse circumstances to make a healthy body out of this starvation diet and most horribly indigestible food. Now, when the first physiological congestion due to menstruation takes place, we have a uterus too large for the ligaments to hold up, and it naturally topples over—usually toward the back, but often toward the front, sometimes both at once. Having this wrong condition, we have pressure on blood vessels and nerves, which keeps up a constant and a growing congestion. The uterus gets large and heavy, the pressure greater, the ovaries are dragged out of position, with congestion and inflammation as a likelihood. The pressure produces bladder disturbances, headache, backache, digestive disturbances, and finally, with a lack of nourishment of the whole body, nerve strain and hard work, a general break-down, which it takes years to get up from, and from which the woman never fully recovers.

"I have seen girls at nineteen years of age, just ready to graduate or just having graduated, complete wrecks, from which it has taken months and months of most careful feeding, constant readjusting of blood and nerve force through manipulative methods to bring them back to health and strength again. They are, however, never as strong as they should have been, had they been properly fed on foods that furnish material to build each tissue and which supply sufficient of the mineral salts to give health and strength, rosy cheeks, and a clear complexion. Yet these are the girls who will be the future mothers. Think, all you who have the care of children, and then study dietetics—not in a faddy way, but so as to have a true knowledge of the needs of the body, and how to supply them."

Once more the editor would strongly urge the loving, but often greatly misguided parents, who read these lines, not to sacrifice the lives and happiness of their children to the foolish idea of cramming into their heads a lot of superfluous facts and figures. School training is, after all, merely handing to the child of the key of the Temple of Knowledge. If the child has a taste for what is within that temple he will use the key. Otherwise, the time expended in furnishing him with it will have been wasted.

Even from the point of view of imparting information—what we call "education," although it is only a small part of real education—the American public schools are woefully lacking, for the reason that they are necessarily compelled to lump a promiscuous herd of young people together, irrespective of their personal peculiarities, whereas, to receive effective teaching, they should be treated as individuals. Some slight effort has been made of late to handle backward children in a special manner, but this only touches the outer rim of the question. We need to get back nearer to the time when parents took an active part in the mental, moral and physical training of their offspring. We need to realize that the training of the heart and the hand, and the teaching of the mind to think straight, are of vastly more importance than the acquisition of a great number of indigestible facts and figures.

Let us, in the training of the young, aim more and more at the ideal of the ancients—"a sound mind in a sound body."

Simplicity and Sloppiness.

ONE day, a few weeks ago, the papers contained dispatches from Europe, announcing the serious illness of Tolstoi, whose death was expected to happen at any moment. Since then, not a word further has appeared in print, so far as the editor is aware.

Anyone who has carefully read accounts of interviews granted by Tolstoi, from time to time, with persons who are not hero worshippers, must have come to the conclusion that the good man was much of a "false alarm," as far as personal reform is concerned. A German governess, who was employed by the Tolstoi family for several years, has published a book, in which much light is thrown on the subject. A commentator, referring to this book says:

"The contradictions in the conduct of Tolstoi are explained by Frau Seuron on physical grounds. He was thoroughly good only when he was perfectly well, and he was often a sufferer, especially from toothache, which he was a martyr until every tooth was out of his head, for he had no faith in dentistry, and preferred let nature take its course in the process of decay. His unreasonable hatred of money, however, had nothing to do with his aversion of giving it, and his idea of mutual helpfulness seemed to him to lose its force as soon as one party demanded and the other began alms.

"He could work with his peasants and talk with them as man to man, but if they jarred upon his sensibilities by asking inopportunely for help his manner changed, he showed himself the despotic nobleman of another race, dealing with immemorial serfdom, and the disappointed laborers shook their heads and retired in silent defeat.

"Tolstoi's contempt for civilization went so far as to make him obtuse to the esthetical and hygienic needs of cleanliness. At one time the Count, formerly an elegant man of the world, entirely neglected the care of his person. He went to the table after hours of manual labor, his clothes reeking, smiling pityingly at times at his family who were disturbed by the inequality. At other times he discarded stockings and wrapped his feet in linen rags, peasant fashion, and wore the same until they were a horror to all who came near him.

"His familiarity with dirt appeared to affect his moral standards also. There were long discussions as to what is and what is not dirty. The Countess and the governess objected to the conversation at table, and the children went into fits of laughter at the funny ideas. When a 10-year-old boy acted upon one of Tolstoi's suggestions, and was reproved for it, he replied: 'The Count says we mustn't make too much fuss over such matters.'

"Tolstoi is always careless about his dress, even in the city. He approves neither of close-fitting trousers for men nor of low-necked dresses for women. He was struck by the cruelty of killing animals for food and tried vegetarianism, but it weakened him."

The same criticism applies to many health reform-ting on this subject, E. W. Conable says, in Growth:

"It has been my misfortune, or good fortune, I do not ow which—to come in contact with a lot of people of ll, especially among so-called new thoughters and food ddlers and 'nature men.' They seem to think that, order to get close to nature they must eat like the rse and cattle. I have met many of these in 'reform' staurants and such places. They will—many of them ay both arms on the table, shove their noses down ose to their plates and shovel in the food with both nds, or with both knife and fork, to speak more accu-ately. Some of them will grasp their knives half way own the blade and feed themselves with it. These peo-e all look intelligent and they talk intelligently, but ve their training has been shamefully neglected, or y consider this way of eating brings them closer to ture, as the animal kingdom, which is in a 'state of ture,' thrusts its nose into its food when eating, and es many other things which the human animal would t be justified in emulating even if the dumb creature s lying a little closer to nature.

"Mother Nature herself is never sloppy or slack or ouchy in anything she does. She started man out all ght in all the beauty and symmetry and perfection of l her other creations. In addition to this she gave m a conscious entity of sufficient range and scope t was intended, if properly utilized, to place him a w degrees in advance of either the pig or ox. So en we are obliged to witness scenes such as are here ustrated, we are forced to draw largely upon the imagition in order to discern or discover wherein this dear other had accomplished very much to her credit when e endowed so-called man with a conscious entity in vance to the pig.

"I have known cases in the past where housekeepers t up so much time keeping things clean that they ssed bad themselves. That is, they would chase ybody up with a rag who chanced to make a little ss on the floor. This took up so much of their time t they forgot to take a bath. This is a case of being 'all-dred' clean. Many of the 'nature' people remind e of these women—they are so persistently bent on ming in touch with nature' that they have no time indulge in the common customs and conventionalis of life. They overlook the fact that Mother Nature, en left undisturbed by the hand of man, is the per-ction of beauty and harmony, cleanly, sweet and esome, graceful in every curve of her magnificent ures, never awkward or slovenly."

"'Tis true, 'tis pity, and pity 'tis, 'tis e." Some time ago the editor, in com-ny with a number of men and women o are interested in the subject of food reform, paid sit to a small colony of nature seekers located in ifornia not far from Los Angeles. The camp was nd to be slovenly and unattractive. No attempt had en made to clean up, the soiled quilts were lying tumed on cots in the open; on a rusty stove under a e stood a pan full of soaked dried peaches, in which wn wasps were browsing. The bare feet of the colists were not in all cases very clean. They seemed, wever, somewhat proud of displaying them as a badge their emancipation. Yet, these same people expressed t surprise and horror when the visitors, who had ught their lunch with them, were found to be con-ing, among other things potatoes—food that had not n ripened above the surface of the earth, in the sun-ne.

"It is well to remember that simplicity and sloppiness e not synonymous; also, that you may, if you please, d the simple life in the heart of a big city; also, that u retire from the haunts of men, and roam about nude d sand-aude, and chew cocoanuts, is not of itself an t of great virtue or utility. A man who eats three eals a day, drinks a couple of bottles of wine, and okes half a dozen cigars, and who does something to ke pleasanter the lot of those around him, is of far ore benefit to the world, and is far more deserving of ise, than a man who seeks the "simple life" by tak-g to the woods and ruminating like a cow.

"At the same time it is scarcely necessary to remark at there is plenty of room between these two extremes.

Misguided Reformers.

A NUMBER of earnest and sincere, but much misguided female political prohibitionists have been making unseemly exhibitions of themselves in various parts of the country, during the past few weeks. Such things as these are silly, childish, unbecoming and absolutely useless, so far as any reform of the drink habit is concerned. This is also true of so-called "prohibition" laws in cities. One of the worst features of this senseless ostrich business of hiding things away and saying they are not there is that it breeds a community of hypocrites. The editor does not believe in the use of alcoholic beverages by young people, except when taken with their family, with their meals, as is the custom in all countries but America, but he would not bring up a family in a "prohibition" town, because he has seen too much of the mean, hypocritical spirit that breeds in such towns.

"On the other side of the question, it is noteworthy that a number of public-spirited, liberal-minded women, at Washington, have formed an Army Canteen Club, to restore the use of the canteen in the army. The club is largely composed of relatives of officers, who realize that the proposed repeal would be a long step toward better conditions, improved morals, increased contentment, and higher efficiency in the army. They know that the enactment of the anti-canteen law was ill-advised, and resulted in a large increase of habitual drunkards in the army, as shown by the recent report of the surgeon-general.

Educate people in regard to the results of overindul-gence in alcohol, and above all, teach them to eat right.
Then, they will soon begin to drink right. You can't make people moral by act of Congress or keep a glutton from stimulants of some kind.

Torture Tables.

IT is not a "layman," but a physician—Dr. G. W.
Campbell—who says of a Los Angeles institution "Durstance where a patient operated on at the Receiving Hospital recovered." Other physicians branded the operating table at the hospital as "more barbarous than the Spanish inquisition."

No wonder poor people dread to be taken to a city or county hospital.

A Climatic Contrast.

WHILE in the northwestern States during the past few weeks entire families have been frozen to death, we of Southern California have been seeking the shade of a tree, to protect us from the ardent embraces of the sun. It is a mystery to the editor how any sane person can be willing to remain in such a country as that, so long as he can possibly manage to buy, beg, borrow or steal the means of coming to California. The editor would rather be a swamper in a Chinese vegetable garden of Los Angeles county than own the finest ranch in the blizzard region—if he had to live on it.

"Viavi."

"VIAVI" is a patent medical compound that is not pushed in the ordinary way. The proprietors never advertise. They have female agents scattered all over the country, who, like the agents for a well-known "medicinal" whisky, work largely through the churches.

Viavi is a compound used by women locally, for uterine ailments. There also go with it pills, or capsules, and another preparation.

In referring to this medicament, several months ago, the editor, writing upon information received, stated that "Viavi" contains narcotics, and temporarily deadens pain. The manufacturers sent a letter to the editor, in which they deny that such is the fact. They also point out that, under the new food law, "Viavi" would have to be labelled as such, if it contained any of the following articles: Alcohol, ethyl, morphine, opium, cocaine, heroin, alpha and beta eucaine, chloroform, cannabis indica, chloral hydrate, acetanilide.

The editor did not delay recognition of this communication because he was unable or unwilling to answer it. The delay was caused by a search for authentic information. On receipt of the letter, the editor immediately corresponded with several authorities of national reputation, in various parts of the country. The food commissioner of the North Dakota Agricultural College wrote:

"I have never taken up a sample of 'Viavi,' although a small quantity of this product was submitted to this laboratory by a party in Fargo—an amber or yellowish fluid—with the request that we examine the same. The only active constituent which could be found was a glycerite of hydrastis."

At the request of the editor, one of the leading medical journals of the United States has placed an analysis of this compound in the hands of two experienced chemists. As soon as their reports are received, they will be published, and will be reproduced in the Care of the Body department.

"Viavi" is recommended for all kinds of uterine troubles, including tumors, or cancers, of the womb, and displacements. That a local application of this kind can be of any permanent value in a displacement of the womb is contrary to reason. In regard to tumors, or cancers, it is possible that "Viavi" may act in a similar way to the poultices that are successfully used for the cure of outer cancers. As previously pointed out, however, all such cures can only be temporary, so long as the wrong conditions that produced the cancer are continued. It may be some time before it returns, but return it will, perhaps in another place.

As to the pills, or capsules, they, of course, contain a drug of some kind. As is well known, the editor firmly believes that all drugs are harmful, in greater or less degree, and moreover, are absolutely useless, so far as the curing of disease is concerned, merely producing a temporary change of symptoms, and delaying a real cure, as nature has to go to work to cast forth these additional poisons, that cannot be utilized by the body.

Dangers of Cold Storage Foods.

THE House Committee on Agriculture, at Washington, recently heard evidence regarding cold-storage food, such evidence being the result of two years' experiments. It was shown that milk and cream and eggs begin to deteriorate at once, and flesh foods after a few weeks.

Of course packers don't agree with this. A local representative of the packers recently explained that storage
"gives flesh a better flavor." Yes. For instance, the "high" flavor of game, which people who have accustomed themselves to that sort of thing so much enjoy. "High" game and "tender" meat means simply that both are rotting—are in various stages of incipient putrefaction. All healthy meat, after it is first killed, is tough. The process of decomposition breaks down the material, and rots it, just as weather will break away a granite cliff. In England they often hang game birds up in a pantry until they rot and drop from the hook. Then they are considered just "right." It is all a matter of taste, as the old lady said when she embraced the cow. A white tribe in Virginia or Tennessee eats clay, and a red tribe in Arizona occasionally eats human excrement.

This is an important question, when we remember that a large proportion of the foods consumed in restaurants and hotels, and even at your home, have been stored up for weeks or months. Chickens, which are natural scavengers, we are told "keep better" with all their entrails in.

The animals get their revenge after death, for the maltreatment dealt to them while they live. For every one who dies suddenly in agony from ptomaine poisoning, caused by eating putrified flesh, a thousand die more slowly, from the effects of eating such food, the true cause being never recognized. When decay is partially arrested by freezing it hurries forward when in a warmer temperature as if to make up for lost time. If you eat flesh foods at least see that they are fresh and clean. And avoid entrails.

Medical Experts as Witnesses.

DURING a recess of the Thaw trial, District Attorney Jerome intimated to an expert alienist, who had testified in the case, that he was a liar. No intelligent man attaches any more importance to the testimony of the average medical expert, at a trial where great interests are at stake, than to the ex parte statements of the lawyers. These experts are hired to say certain things and they do so. At the Thaw trial one expert testified that the accused was insane when he shot his victim, but is sane now. Slick, isn't it?

Finger Nails.

WHITE spots in the nails are usually due to imperfect circulation of the blood and nervousness, and these, again, are due to wrong living. Live right, and the spots will disappear.

* * *

Unnecessary Examinations.

A WOMAN recently shot at a doctor in New York, because, as she claimed, he had told her she must undergo a thorough examination, had given her an anesthetic, and then had outraged her.

A great majority of these vaginal examinations are unnecessary, and are an insult to womanhood. There is of course no necessity for giving an anesthetic. In cases where an examination may be necessary, a true woman will employ a physician of her own sex, even if she has to travel a couple of hundred miles to find one.

It is only fair to add however, that, strange as it may seem, while such examinations are abhorrent to all normally-constituted women, there are a few cases where women insist upon an examination, even after they have been assured by a conscientious physician that such examination is not necessary.

* * *

And This in Milwaukee.

A SIXTY-YEAR-OLD witness in a Milwaukee case, who had been charged with kissing a young woman, is reported by the dispatch to have said:

"I have never kissed a woman in my life, and no woman has ever kissed me, and never will, so help me God."

Whereupon, the dispatch goes on to say that "a round of applause from the spectators followed the statement."

Wherefore the applause? A man might as well boast of never having taken a bath, or shaved.

* * *

A New Disguise for Dope.

ONE of the patent medicine people—or more likely one of their smart advertising men—has hit upon a new plan of seducing the public to consume their "dope." The ordinary advertising of patent medicines, with absurdly exaggerated statements, has been carried to such an extent that it has become somewhat of a "chestnut," and is not so effective as it was. This new "ad" is made up to look as if it were an original article, and is run in the papers as closely like original reading matter in appearance as the paper will permit. One local paper runs it in exactly the same style as ordinary reading matter, without anything at all to distinguish it, in the shape of heading or mark. This is not fair to the readers.

The "ad" starts in with an intimation that it would be well for the reader to "cut this item out and put it in a safe place." "The prescription is simple, and can be made up by any one at home. The ingredients can be had at every good prescription pharmacy, and all that is necessary is to shake them well in a bottle."

The article goes on to state that a few doses "is said" to relieve almost any case, etc., etc. "It is now claimed" to be the method of curing, etc., etc. The writer then tells how certain ingredients can be purchased at a drug store. One of these ingredients, of course, is a secret preparation, that no druggist can obtain, except from the manufacturers.

This is quite a clever scheme, and will doubtless work for a time, until people begin to doubt everything they see in the papers relating to medicine. That time is, however, doubtless some distance in the future. To read over these patent-medicine advertisements gives one a good idea of the dense ignorance prevailing among the people in regard to the simplest laws of health and the cause of disease. It is indeed time that the hygienic schoolmaster should be abroad in the land.

Medical Legislation at Sacramento.

IT was mentioned last week that a bill had been introduced in the State Legislature, by the osteopaths, under one provision of which bill any man, from anywhere, would be enabled to take the practical examination from the osteopathic board of examiners, whether he holds a diploma from an osteopathic college or not, thus creating the "open shop" in medicine, as compared with the "closed shop" of the regulars. Naturally, the medical trust objects to anything in the shape of liberality in medicine—except liberality for "regular" quacks to apply their nefarious trade, provided they have an M. D. diploma. Therefore a new bill was introduced, drawn by Dr. J. A. McKee of Sacramento, a "regular," who is chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Health and Quarantine. Under this bill the osteopaths would be obliged to pass the same examination as the allopaths, the homeopaths and eclectics, which would manifestly be as gross an injustice as if a teacher of a certain system of shorthand were obliged to pass an examination in some other fellow's system. The "regulars" expressed their willingness to consider an amendment that would give the Governor the appointment of the State Board of Medical Examiners, instead of leaving it to the various medical bodies. This move may or may not have been influenced by the fact that a Los Angeles judge recently decided that the osteopathic board was exercising unconstitutional powers. If so, then the same is probably true of the "regular" board. The allopaths also proposed that one osteopath should be added to the board, leaving the allopaths still in the majority. Dr. F. M. Pottenger of Los Angeles defended the present system as one "best conserving the health and life of the people, by keeping up a high standard." It is a system that keeps out competition of worthy men, and permits any one who has an M. D. diploma to do about anything he pleases, from extortion to murder. This doctor must have a queer idea of what is best for the people.

The latest advices received, up to this writing—dated Sacramento, February 13—stated that, after numerous conferences, the physicians of the various schools had reached a partial agreement on the amendments to the McKee bill, the latest being that one more member should be added to the board, making five allopaths, two homeopaths, two eclectics and two osteopaths. This would put the allopaths in a minority, on paper, but they doubtless expect to count on the support of the eclectics, in any action they may take.

Nuts to Crack.

A PASADENA woman sends the following queries:

"How many nuts, say almonds or walnuts, combined with fruit, are necessary to keep a woman who does her own housework, in the best shape? You have given this before in ounces, but many of us do not have any means of weighing accurately. We can all count though.

"(2) Is it best to eat different kinds of fruits at the same meal?

"(3) Should we eat ripe olives and nuts at one time?"

[Answers.] (1) This depends. If it is pinones, you may need several hundred, whereas if it is cocoanuts one would suffice. Walnuts weigh much more than almonds. Why don't you get scales? They are cheap enough. Every one interested in diet should have scales, not to constantly weigh what he eats, but to settle in his mind the weight of various foodstuffs, so that he can judge at any time about how much he is consuming.

(2) It is always best to eat as few different foods as possible at a meal. One fruit at a time is best, except that, when you eat sour fruit, you may mix a little sweet fruit with it, or, on the other hand, when you are eating sweet fruit, a little acid fruit may be mixed with it.

(3) No. There would be no sense in mixing two oils. You might as well pour olive oil on your butter.

Freckles.

A CORRESPONDENT, who signs the original name "Constant Reader," asks for a "good, tried and true remedy for removing freckles, without injury to the skin." "There ain't no sich a thing," Constant, although a dozen manufacturers of nostrums will tell you otherwise.

Freckles are caused by oxydation of the iron in the blood where it comes in contact with the air. In the same way, you may notice, in rocks exposed to the air, little brown specks. These are the "freckles" of the rocks, arising from the same cause, iron and oxygen. Freckles are usually found on the flesh of fair people. The same material that causes freckles gives the red tint to the hair, that painters have always raved over.

Don't be afraid of freckles, or tan. They are not like discolorations due to disease. On the contrary, they are rather indicative of health and vigor. Only foolish people carp at freckles. Still, it is a fact that the lives of many sensitive girls are made miserable by gibes of foolish companions at their red hair and freckles. From an artistic point of view, they are both adorable, but in in this country the artistic eye is chiefly noteworthy by its absence. The editor has a daughter of this kind, with Titian hair, and a more than ample supply of sun spots. When she was about five years old, her mother was telling her something about heaven, as it is described to us by imaginative writers, whereupon she anxiously inquired: "And mamma, will I be a little freckled-faced angel?"

Care of the Body.

...ixed Blood.

A RECENT dispatch from New York announced that the congregation of an aristocratic Episcopalian church is all split up, owing to a report that the pastor, who has a dark complexion, has negro blood, whereas he claims that his mother was a Mohawk Indian. A number of the members of the congregation have left, and the parson has been fired. Strange, is it not, in this cosmopolitan country, where in many States native sons are rare birds, there should be so much fuss over the possibility of a person's blood containing a few drops of African, instead of Indian tint? One reason for this may be that the great vitality of the negro race causes the dark skin sometimes to appear in an infant long after its existence in the family has been forgotten, which, of course, is highly inconvenient and embarrassing.

A mixture of races that are such great opposites as the Caucasian and the negro race is not a good thing. Half-breeds usually inherit the bad qualities of both parents, as we may see in Mexico, where the native Indian is in every way superior to the average peon of mixed blood.

If the owners of slaves in the South had left their slave women alone, we should not have been troubled with this mixed-blood question. It is one of the curses that have descended to us from slavery days.

How to Live a Hundred Years.

THE VEGETARIAN MAGAZINE, for January, contained a good portrait of our fellow-townsman, M. L. Wicks, also fourteen rules for "How to Live a Hundred Years." If the editor remembers, these were published in the Care of the Body department several years ago. The only rule that the editor would criticise is Number 4, which reads as follows:

"Take between meals, daily, the equivalent of two glasses of aerated distilled water, admirably supplied in fresh fruit, one-fourth of it upon arising, one-fourth in the forenoon, and one-fourth in the afternoon, and one-fourth before retiring. Eat no fruit after dark."

As readers know, the editor believes that to drink when you are not thirsty is only a little less harmful than to eat when you are not hungry. The injunction to drink large quantities of water daily, whether you are thirsty or not, is sure to be productive of bad effects. If you have not a normal thirst procure a normal thirst, by exercise and deep breathing, just as if you have not a normal appetite don't keep shoving a lot of food into the hole in your face, but procure a normal appetite by the same means. The advice to take your water pure, in the shape of fresh fruit, is excellent, but the advice to eat fruit between meals is wrong.

Circumcision.

J. R. B. writes to ask in regard to the advisability of circumcision. This practice should only be resorted to when there is abnormality. When proper treatment is given at birth, it is scarcely ever necessary. The operation is rarely attended with danger.

Circumcision is regarded by the Jews as a religious rite, although like most of the other laws of Moses, it has a strictly hygienic significance, being, like so many other of Mosiac laws, in behalf of cleanliness. The practice is by no means confined to the Jews. The Mohammedans practice the same operation, as do many other nations and tribes throughout the world. In some cases females are also circumcised. During the past few years this operation has become quite a fad among fashionists, both men and women, in this section. One prominent doctor in Los Angeles is kept busy performing the operation. It is foolish to submit to circumcision, unless there is a decided indication of its necessity, as it may sometimes be followed with unpleasant after effects.

ETYMOLOGY FOR WOMEN.

"Bah!" she said, and flung a wad of paper into the grate. Swishing their silk skirts, the others turned from the club window with inquiring looks.

"Bah!" she said again. "Can we women never be rid of the shackles that man has been loading on us ever since the cave bear's day? Girls, I've been reading etymology, and do you know what I've found out? I have found out that our very titles of honor are but the badges of our servitude.

"Lady, for instance, says my etymology, means one who waits. A lady is a female who waits at table while a man gorges himself.

"Wife means a weaver. The wife is the woman who weaves her husband's and children's clothes.

"Spinster is a spinner—a girl who must spin a lifetime's supply of linen before any man will take her off her old folks' hands.

"We don't need mere spelling reform. We need word reform. Let some Roosevelt rise and abolish the words 'lady,' 'spinster,' and 'wife' from the language, and let suitable substitutes for them be invented."

"Hear, hear!" rose a soprano chorus.

LOGIC OF ODD PRICES.

"There's a reason for everything," said a dry goods merchant. "There's even a reason for odd prices—$1.12, $1.23, $1.24 and so on.

"The reason for these prices is that they keep the customer waiting for change, and while he waits he looks around, seeing, two to one, something else that he wants to buy.

"Odd prices, causing the customer to examine the stock, are responsible for some 15 or 20 per cent. of each day's sales."

METALS HAVE ODOR.

GERMAN SCIENTIST GIVES RESULTS OF EXPERIMENTS WITH VARIOUS METALS.

[Berlin Cablegram to Chicago Tribune:] Herr Gruhn gives details of his latest experiments in connection with his discovery that metals have odors. Through daily observations he shows each metal has a characteristic odor. Many treatises contain the statement that these bodies are absolutely inodorous, as metals do not lose anything of their weight.

The theory so far adopted in regard to the origin of odors, which is that volatized atoms mixed with atmospheric air penetrate into the organ of smell, does not, in fact satisfactorily account for the phenomena.

In the first experiment of Herr Gruhn it was shown that a piece of copper, aluminum, tin, or other metal possesses a slight odor, which many persons are unable to detect. In the second experiment the same pieces of metal were heated above a lamp to a moderate temperature, when they were found to give off strong odors, which readily were distinguishable by anybody. From the experiments so far it would seem the condition, either pure or oxidized, of the surface of a metal does not exercise any influence on quality or intensity of smell.

The third experiment showed that if a piece of metal be heated for about an hour, its temperature being kept constant, it at first gives off a strong smell, which gradually decreases in intensity until it is just equivalent to its smell in the cold state. If, however, heating be discontinued and the metal cooled, it no more shows the least trace of smell. Another heating immediately afterward will produce only a slight smell. The metal thus appears to have become well-nigh exhausted. If the same increase of temperature be imparted to another sample of the same metal the stronger effects of the fresh metal become especially striking.

These phenomena always occur in exactly the same manner. From this it is inferred that the matter vaporized during heating is not identical with the metal itself. In fact, it would be difficult to understand why vaporization of metal eventually should cease in case of prolonged heating. It certainly could be objected that prolonged heating would result in the production of a layer of oxide on the surface, putting an end to vaporization. Experiments, however, show that the layer of oxide in no way interferes with the emission of smell from heated metal.

The phenomena described in the fourth experiment afford striking evidence of Herr Gruhn's hypothesis. A piece of metal being deprived of its smell was kept in a cold state two or three hours and then heated anew. It then was found to have been restored to its previous power, smelling strongly as a fresh piece of metal. The experiment can be repeated any number of times. It should be remembered the temperatures concerned were by no means excessive. A temperature of 50 degrees centigrade was quite sufficient.

From his experiments Herr Gruhn draws the conclusion that metals continually give out emanations of gaseous matter, composed not of atoms of metal, but rather a product of transformation from these atoms. Metals possess power of storing this odorous matter in the same way that carbonic acid is stored in water. The experimenter finally succeeded in separating and isolating in a vessel the odor given off from metals. The emanations in question thus behave accurately in the same way as emanations given off from radio-active bodies.

A JOKE THAT FAILED.

The government of the new Territory of Nevada was an interesting menagerie. Gov. Nye was an old and seasoned politician from New York—politician, not statesman. He had white hair; he was in fine physical condition; he had a winningly friendly face and deep lustrous brown eyes that could talk as a native language the tongue of every feeling, every passion, every emotion. His eyes could outtalk his tongue, and this is saying a good deal, for he was a very remarkable talker, both in private and on the stump. He was a shrewd man; he generally saw through surfaces and perceived what was going on inside without being suspected of having an eye on the matter.

When grown-up persons indulge in practical jokes, the fact gauges them. They have lived narrow, obscured and ignorant lives, and at full manhood they still retain and cherish a joblot of left-over standards and ideals that would have been discarded with their boyhood if they had then moved out into the world and a broader life. There were many practical jokers in the new Territory. I do not take pleasure in exposing this fact, for I liked those people; but what I am saying is true. I wish I could say a kindlier thing about them instead—that they were burglars, or hat-rack thieves, or something like that, that wouldn't be utterly uncomplimentary. I would prefer it, but I can't say those things. they would not be true. These people were practical jokers, and I will not try to disguise it. In other respects they were plenty good-enough people; honest people; reputable and likable. They played practical jokes upon each other with success, and got the admiration and applause and also the envy of the rest of the community. Naturally they were eager to try their arts on big game, and that was what the Governor was. But they were not able to score. They made several efforts, but the Governor defeated these efforts without any trouble and went on smiling his pleasant smile as if nothing had happened. Finally the joker chiefs of Carson City and Virginia City conspired together to see if their combined talent couldn't win a victory, for the jokers were getting into a very uncomfortable place: the people were laughing at them, instead of at their proposed victim. They banded themselves together to the number of ten and invited the Governor to what was a most extraordinary attention in those days—pickled oyster stew and champagne—luxuries very seldom seen in that region, and existing rather as fabrics of the imagination than as facts.

The Governor took me with him. He said disparagingly:

"It's a poor invention. It doesn't deceive. Their idea is to get me drunk and leave me under the table, and from their standpoint this will be very funny. But they don't know me. I am familiar with champagne and have no prejudices against it."

The fate of the joke was not decided until 2 o'clock in the morning. At that hour the Governor was serene, genial, comfortable, contented, happy and sober, although he was so full that he couldn't laugh without shedding champagne tears. Also, at that hour the last joker joined his comrades under the table, drunk to the last perfection. The Governor remarked:

"This is a dry place, Sam; let's go and get something to drink and go to bed."—[Mark Twain, in North American Review.
